FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL NEWS.

HALIFAX, Monday, July 20.

The steamship Africa, Capt. STONE, from Liverpool 11th, via Queenstown 12th, arrived at this port at 5:30 P. M., to-day. She has 49 passengers for Halifax and 42 for Boston.

The steamship Scotia, from New-York, arrived at Queenstown on the 30th.

The Teutonic, from New-York, arrived at Southampton on the 10th.

The St. Andrew arrived at Liverpool on the 11th.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Morning Post says that Mr. LINDSAY is expected to favor the House of Commons on the 13th with a detailed account of his several interviews with the Emperor NAPOLEON from a note book, in which he noted down the substance of each conversation regarding America, when he returned from the Imperial closet. The Post questions the infallibility of Mr. LINDSAY as a reporter, and is anxious to know in what language the conference was carried on.

The Morning Herald learns that Mr. LAYARD's contradiction, notwithstanding ROEBUCK's two principal allegations, are substantially correct; that one member of the Cabinet, at least, has been sounded on the question of recognition, and hints that the Foreign Secretary, whilst monopolizing all the responsibility, has very little control over the foreign affairs.

The Daily News says: "We are under the impression that the American war will soon be brought to a close, through the growing unpopularity in the North and the Confederate successes in the very neighborhood of Washington."

The sepoy of the Confederate Loan on the 9th rose to ⅜ dis.@¾ prem., and on the 10th to ¾ premium.

The Times (city article) argues that the premium on gold in New-York must again advance, not only on account of the dividends to be remitted to Europe, but from the cessation on the 30th June of the funding operation on the conversion of five-twenties in stock.

The London journals criticize the Scotia's news.

The Times says: "We may expect within a week to hear of President DAVIS being in Washington;" and in a review of the present military situations finds ground for the conclusion. It says all have come to regard the loss of Washington as a great and critical contingency—almost a decision of the war itself, compelling overtures of peace from its unsuccessful defenders.

The Post remarks that Gen. HOOKER, finding himself outgeneraled, endeavors to cast odium on another; condemns the Army of the Potomac for its inactivity, while the invaders were pouring in a continuous stream into the land, which patriotism, if not military duty, ought to incite it to defend. The Federal Government is conscious that unless the tide of invasion is stemmed by regular troops, it will never be stopped at all.

The Army and Navy Gazette says:

"The boldness and determination of the Confederates surprise us, as they must extort the praise of every soldier. It is scarcely possible to exaggerate the audacity of Gen. LEE's enterprise, nor to conceive anything more contemptible than the resistance encountered in its execution. While Philadelphia trembles, Baltimore is hopeful. It would seem as if the Confederate leader did not care much for either, but is satisfied that he can occupy the one and liberate the other when his great blow shall have been struck successfully. But failure will be ruin. Failure in what? In nothing more nor less than an attempt to dictate terms of peace from the Capital of the United States."

The same journal, in view of the possibility of JEFFERSON DAVIS overthrowing President LINCOLN, says:

"Should another Government address us from Washington, it may be difficult—indeed impossible—to refuse to acknowledge it."

In the House of Commons, on the 9th, Mr. FORTESCUE said the transfer of interests in the Hudson's Bay Company to the new Company was not such as required the interference of the Government. All was perfectly legal, and no remonstrance has been received from Canada.

Mr. PEEL stated that the injury to the Malta and Alexandria cable had been found in shallow water, seventy miles from Alexandria. He expected it would be repaired in about a month.

Mr. LAYARD said the Government had no information upon the report that a further extension of ten days had been given the Japanese Government to reply to the English ultimatum.

Lord PALMERSTON moved to a second reading the fortifications bill, and, after a considerable opposition, the motion was agreed to. PALMERSTON argued that the American war furnished experience to justify proceeding with the fortifications. In reply to some strictures by Mr. COBDEN, he said that a General, although a good amateur diplomatist, was not likely to succeed as an amateur General. Amateur Generals had been tried in America. To wear uniforms and cockades in the hat were sufficient qualifications for the command of an army; but the result was that instead of Richmond being taken in ninety days, they were now expecting the rebels at Washington.

On the 10th Sir J. FERGUSON urged that, considering the change recently taken place in the character of the American war, it would be impolitic to resume discussion upon the subject.

Lord PALMERSTON also requested Mr. ROEBUCK to drop the further discussion, as it was not desirable to resume it, or to bind the Government to pledge themselves as to future action. Mr. ROEBUCK postponed his answer till the 13th, but thought a better answer than his would be heard before that day.

In the House of Lords Earl RUSSELL said the Japanese entered deliberately into the treaty, and must be taught through civilized operations to respect strangers if they did not respect themselves. If war took place it would do good, if avoided by submission it would do more good.

The Daily News, referring to the question of postponing ROEBUCK's motion, attacks PALMERSTON, who is supporting the postponement, manages to convey to the House the impression that he too was anxiously expecting news from Washington which might affect the action of the British Government.

The Herald says there is great justice in Mr. FERGUSON's view: that it would be a misfortune if the vote of the House of Commons should make it appear that the House was hostile to the independence of the Southern Confederacy, when the Confederate army was at the gates of Washington, Philadelphia and Baltimore.

MACREADY, the distinguished artist, is dead.

FRANCE.

The monthly returns of the Bank of France show a decrease in cash on hand of nearly 40,000,000 francs.

Le Nord has reason to believe that Mr. DAYTON did not declare that America would consider the recognition of the Confederate States as a casus belli.

Drouyn de Lhuys asked Mr. Dayton whether a fresh offer of mediation would be well received at Washington. Mr. Dayton gave a negative answer.

SPAIN.

Rumors of Ministerial changes are unfounded.

RUSSIA.

St. Petersburgh letters assert that GORTSCHAKOFF's reply to the notes of the three Powers will be very pacific. It will only make some reserves relative to the time and place of the Conference.

DENMARK.

The Copenhagen Journal says the probable cause of the repeated meeting of the Kings of Denmark and Sweden is the prospect of serious differences between Germany and Denmark.

POLAND.

Encounters continue to be daily reported. In two fights near Konin, the Russians were driven into Prussian territory, and were reconducted to the frontier with military honors by the Prussian authorities.

Prince CIDAM SAPIEHA was arrested at Lemberg on suspicion of having supported the late expedition to Volhynia.

Persecutions of ladies for wearing mourning in Volhynia were increasing.

That portion of the Paris Press which has most strongly advocated the cause of Poland, continues to urge the French Government to action.

It is stated that the Russians are reconstructing the massive batteries at Bomarsund which were dismantled by the Allies in the Crimean war.

The Swedish Cabinet intends to send a protest to the five Powers.

PRUSSIA.

The editor of the Berlin National Zeitung has been condemned to four weeks imprisonment and hard labor on the fortifications with felons for publishing an article from the London Times on Prussia.

GREECE.

Order was completely restoree at Athens. The Bank was saved. The garrison has been sent to the provinces.

IMPORTANT MISSION TO EUROPE.

BOSTON, Monday, July 20.

Hon. WILLIAM WHITING, Solicitor of the War Department, will leave Boston in Wednesday's steamer as the accredited agent of the United States to the Courts of Europe, and as the Commissioned legal adviser of our Ministers in England and France, in reference to matters of great importance. A fleet of powerful iron-clad steamers is now being fitted out at Buttonwood, in Great Britain, supposed to be intended for the rebel navy; and his visit probably has direct reference to that fact.

The Rebel Pirates at Portland.

PORTLAND, Me., Monday, July 20.

The report published in a morning paper here of the attempted escape of the Tacony's prisoners, proves to be unfounded.

The schooner J. G. Curtis has returned here yesterday from a cruise after pirates.

END OF MORGAN'S GREAT RAID

Unsuccessful Attempts to Cross the Ohio at Various Points.

One Hundred and Fifty Rebels Killed and Drowned, and Over a Thousand Prisoners with the Artillery Taken.

Probable Capture of the Entire Force.

CLEVELAND, Monday, July 20.

MORGAN made an unsuccessful attempt to cross the Ohio yesterday, near Cooleyville, but was prevented by a gunboat. One hundred and fifty rebels were killed and drowned. A thousand prisoners were taken, with their artillery. Among the prisoners were Col. WARD and Col. DICK MORGAN, a brother of JOHN. The band was scattered among the hills. Gen. JUDAH is confident of capturing the balance of the party to-day.

CINCINNATI, Monday, July 20.

On Saturday morning MORGAN's forces were overtaken near Pomeroy by Gens. HOBSON and JUDAH, who had formed a junction. MORGAN finding himself in close quarters, and learning that the ford at Buffington Island was well guarded, broke up his band into small squads, in order to escape. One squad, with six pieces of artillery, made for the crossing at Buffington. Our gunboats drove them back, with the loss of 150 killed and wounded. Our cavalry charged and captured the battery, killing a number of the rebels.

Cols. WOLFORD and SHACKELFORD succeeded in capturing one lot of 575 and another of 275, beside numerous squads, making in all over 1,000 prisoners. Our cavalry is in pursuit of the balance of the command, which is entirely broken up and scattered among the hills. The position of our forces is such that the rebels cannot cross the Ohio, nor get much further North.

CINCINNATI, Monday, July 20—P. M.

Our forces are continually capturing MORGAN's men.

BASIL DUKE was captured near Pomeroy, this morning. Thirteen hundred men have been taken, so far.

Maj. BROWN, commanding a battalion of the Tenth Kentucky cavalry, has arrived here, with 150 prisoners, captured during a reconnoissance near Abingdon, Va.

AFFAIRS AT VICKSBURGH.

After the Surrender—The Terms of Surrender—Servants Claimed by Confederate Officers as "Private Property"—How Gens. Grant and Logan Dispose of the Question.

From Our Own Correspondent.

VICKSBURGH, Wednesday, July 8, 1863.

I have already mentioned that in discussing the "terms of surrender," as the Confederates call it, but the "concessions" following the unconditional surrender, as Gen. GRANT calls it, the Confederate officers were told that they might carry away their private property, side arms, &c., and also have one horse apiece. Thirty teams were also allowed them for transporting their provisions and baggage.

These modest Confederate gentlemen now affect to believe it was understood that, in the stipulation concerning the taking away of their private property, were included their negroes, or as they classically term them, "body servants," because they consider them private property. As a matter of course this absurd claim on the part of the Confederates has caused more disturbance and been fruitful of more trouble to the Provost-Marshal and his assistants than all other things together. Of course the servants, like their masters, have had to be paroled, but, unlike them, they are not anxious to leave in a hurry; and those who do wish to leave do not wish to travel in the same direction with their masters. All this causes trouble. At first they tried persuasion, then made brilliant promises, then threatened, and, finally, in their desperation, fell back on the "terms of surrender." They found their private property moving around town, and, to all appearances, as much gentlemen as themselves. (Some of them, during the first day or two after the capture of the place, in the desperation of their hunger, actually stood behind their private property, and modestly begged for something to eat, and were glad to "accept" what was left from the niggers' meal. National officers who saw this, made the statement to me as a solemn fact.) They had difficulty in finding their private property, and when they did find it, it would not stay where they put it. But, worse than this, and the unkindest cut of all, they actually found some of their private property in a camp below the town enlisted as Union soldiers, and learning the manual of the piece! This was a new revelation decidedly. Was it possible that this property of theirs was to be taken for public uses—and such uses? It was a "violation of the agreement;" it was not "using them as gentlemen; for how could a gentleman subsist without a nigger." A horse was well enough in its way, but who was to take care of the horse?

Gen. LOGAN was accordingly besieged with the most pitiful complaints of bad faith, and the Provost-Marshal heard nothing or little else from morning to night but "My nigger," "My servant," "Can't I have my servant?"

To make a long story short, Gen. LOGAN, to whom the officers in command of the Corps d'Afrique complained of constant interference from these rebel claimants of negroes, gave orders not to enlist any more colored men until these Confederate officers had left the place. At the same time, an order was issued not to allow any of them to carry negroes beyond the lines, or to permit them to go out. "If I had been let alone," said the Colonel of the colored regiment, "my regiment would have been full by this time." Those who have seen these colored men in line, and under drill, have spoken of them as a fine, soldierly-looking set of men.

A Union officer was conversing with a rebel officer yesterday, when this subject came up. "Oh, don't talk to me about nigger soldiers, it makes me sick!" exclaimed the rebel. No doubt of it.

LATER.—I learn that Gen. GRANT has removed all constraint over the peripatetic "private property" of the rebels, by allowing all who wish to go with their masters to do so. If they elect to remain in our lines, and ask protection, they cannot be removed.

SATURDAY, July 11.

The business of paroling was completed last evening—31,200 individual paroles having been issued. These included officers and privates on their feet, and 10,000 invalids in hospitals and convalescent camps. Most of them have gone. They are taken outside of Gen. SHERMAN's lines—wherever that may be. Large numbers have been skulking in out-of-the-way places, and along the river, waiting for opportunities to be ferried over, but they are not allowed to cross the river. Under the cartel of exchange, no one can take the oath of allegiance.

With these 31,000, added to at least 1,200 killed, wounded and prisoners at Helena on the 4th, and with the prisoners continually being sent into Gen. SHERMAN, our Provost-Marshal and military authorities have their hands full.

The story about Gen. GRANT's having been cheered by the citizens when he rode into the town is not correct. The troops cheered, but the Secesh remained sullenly and savagely quiet.

By the published General Orders which I send, it will be seen that the military authorities intend not to repeat the blunders committed at Memphis. No general trading here will be permitted for the benefit of the rebels, who are always sure to profit most by it. The place will be held as a military post, strictly, and the enemies of the country need not expect to replenish their emptied larders, cellars and wardrobes under our auspices. Families are slowly returning to their vacant dwellings, and are glad to accept protection from the military authorities.

An officer from Gen. BANKS' Staff came up on the steamer Gen. Price on Wednesday evening, with dispatches to Gen. GRANT. The siege was progressing at Port Hudson in the usual way, but Gen. GARDNER, it was stated by deserters, had promised to surrender on the 10th, if reinforcements or relief did not arrive. They, too, like Vicksburgh, were enjoying the luxuries of mule diet.

REINFORCEMENTS FOR GEN. BANKS.

Gen. HEXER's division, of about 5,000 men, are embarking to-day for Port Hudson, and others, I hear, are to follow immediately. This will insure the capture of the place in due time.

The rebels, it is reported, have opened communication through Grant's Pass, from Mobile Bay into Mississippi Sound, and have fortified the adjacent islands. They threaten Ship Island, and even talk about attacking New-Orleans, by way of the Regolettes and Lake Ponchartrain. They send word they have 60,000 men in Alabama. Of course, we are bound to believe all they say.

The town will be left just as we found it, except so far as it may be necessary to remove barricades, &c., to facilitate public business.

The ten thousand and odd sick and wounded, by the terms of surrender, are to be fed and doctored until they are sufficiently recovered to be able to leave. When convalescent, they will be sent out of the lines.

GEN. SHERMAN AT RAYMOND.

The news from Gen. SHERMAN is up to yesterday. His forces were then at Raymond, having left Jackson to his left. He has been continually skirmishing with JOHNSTON, whose movements indicated that he was intending to go to Port Hudson. We are daily capturing prisoners, cutting off detachments of his rear guard, or picking up stragglers. They all come here, and will be sent up the river. Six hundred have arrived. There has been all sorts of rumors in town, most of them weak inventions of the enemy; among others, the reported death of Gen. OSTERHAUS. They have previously killed, by rumor, all our Generals in turn. Nothing is known of the matter at headquarters.

The weather is very hot, tempered only by occasional showers. The town, as the greys and butternuts retire, is becoming more quiet. Here the opening of the Mississippi, which must virtually follow the fall of Port Hudson, is considered as the earnest of peace, and an early restoration of order and free trade in the Valley of the Mississippi.

Adams' Express Agency was in full blast here on the day following the surrender of the town. They are doing a good business. D. S.

GEN. LOGAN'S ORDER.

HEADQUARTERS POST,
VICKSBURGH, Miss., July 6, 1863.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 2.—For the better government of the City of Vicksburgh the following orders will be rigidly enforced:

All Department orders, and particularly the orders regulating and prohibiting trade south of Helena, will be strictly observed. No liquors or merchandise of any kind will be permitted to land at the levee or brought within the lines of the fortifications, with the exception of sanitary stores and such sutlers' stores as are allowed by orders from the War Department. Sutlers' stores must be located in the camps of their respective regiments. Provisions from adjacent plantations may be brought inside the lines under such restrictions as shall be hereafter imposed. No citizen or soldier will be permitted to leave or enter the city, except upon the pass of the Provost-Marshal or a general officer. Supply trains for the troops adjacent and the army in the field will be permitted to pass after proper examination by the officer of the guard.

No person will be permitted to pass about the city between 9 P. M. and "Reveille," except he be furnished with the countersign. All persons apprehended violating this rule will be confined in the city guard-room and brought before the Provost-Marshal, or the Major-General Commanding for examination. The utmost quietude and regularity will be observed and enforced by the troops on duty in the city. Private houses will not be entered by soldiers, except under proper orders. All public property will be protected from molestation.

Guards will be posted near the city, and on the different streets; patrols, under active and vigilant officers, will be kept moving about the levee, city, and its approaches.

All boats arriving at or leaving this Post will be subjected to such examination as may be necessary to prevent the arrival or departure of improper persons or articles. The Provost-Marshal, officers of guards, patrols, and detachments are charged with the enforcement of these orders, and are directed to report promptly, to these Headquarters, all violations of military propriety, discipline, or regulations.

By Order of Maj.-Gen. JOHN A. LOGAN.
R. R. TOWNES, Acting-Adjutant-General.

THE PURSUIT OF BRAGG.

Gen. Rosecrans' Advance Reported to be at Rome, Ga.

MEMPHIS, Friday, July 17.

Gen. HURLBUT's scouts arrived at Corinth to-day, from Decatur and Jacksonville. They report that BRAGG was retreating precipitately into Georgia, followed by ROSECRANS' forces. ROSECRANS' advance was reported to be at Rome, Ga.

The scouts report that BRAGG was endeavoring to make a junction with JOHNSTON, and that desertions from his army were numerous.

Naval Movements.

THE PASSAIC ORDERED TO CHARLESTON.

Admiral PAULDING yesterday morning received instructions to dispatch the iron-clad battery Passaic to Charleston with all convenient speed. Accordingly the officers of the vessel were immediately summoned on board, steam was got up, and at 5 o'clock in the afternoon the vessel dropped from her anchorage down the river. She made a trial trip day before yesterday for the purpose of testing the value of a "basket" intended to protect the propeller when moving amid obstructions. The invention failed, and the ship sailed without it. The following is a list of her officers: Commander, EDWARD SIMPSON; Assistant Surgeon, Edgar Holden; Assistant Paymaster, Jesse P. Woodbury; Acting Master, Samuel Heuse; Paymaster's Steward, J. Dunklee; Second Surgeon, O. W. Davis; First Assistant Engineer, N. B. Little; Second Assistant Engineer, H. W. Robie; Third Assistant Engineers, J. W. Mitchell, W. A. Dripps and J. Hooper; Acting Ensigns, L. C. Emmerson and H. R. Baker; Yeoman, W. J. McCoombs.

THE IRON-CLAD ROANOKE A SUCCESS.

Experiments have been made on board the iron-clad Roanoke, at Newport News, and a report of the proceedings has been forwarded to the Navy Department. The ordnance and other departments of the vessel tested turn out to be completely successful, and the Roanoke is now at the disposal of the Government for any service it may see fit to order her.

AN ENTIRELY NEW TYPE OF IRON-CLADS ORDERED TO BE BUILT.

The Navy Department has decided to build another new batch of iron-clad vessels-of-war, differing in several important respects from all those hitherto constructed in this country. Instead of being propelled by a screw they will have paddle-wheels, and be entirely iron, with only the necessary wooden backing. The following parties have contracted to build one each of the new vessels: THOMAS ROWLAND, of Greenpoint; one contractor in Philadelphia, and one in Boston. These ships will be finished about the same time as the fifteen light-draft vessels.

THE RETREAT OF LEE.

The Main Body of His Army Between Winchester and Culpepper.

GENERAL MEADE IN ACTIVE PURSUIT.

SPECIAL DISPATCH FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Monday, July 20.

The movements of LEE are enveloped in as much mystery as were his operations in the Shenandoah Valley prior to advancing into Maryland and Pennsylvania. The main body of his army is supposed to be somewhere between Winchester and Culpepper. Gen. MEADE is in active pursuit, and will soon be heard from. The Republican this afternoon says:

"LEE's army is moving leisurely down the valley toward Richmond. He is evidently either confident that he has the advantage in his route, and that he can move his forces on the southern side of the mountains unmolested, or he has assurances of a co-operating force advancing to meet him, or his army is so worn out and exhausted that it cannot move rapidly. It is certain that he is not so far in advance of MEADE as the public has been led to suppose, and collisions between portions of our forces and portions of the rebel army are liable to occur."

GEN. SICKLES.

Gen. SICKLES has so far recovered from his wounds as to be able to ride about in his carriage and return the calls of his friends.

REPORTS FROM HAGERSTOWN.

PHILADELPHIA, Monday, July 20.

The Inquirer, of this city, has the following special dispatch:

HAGERSTOWN, Sunday, July 19.

The rear guard of Gen. LEE's army left Martinsburgh at 2 o'clock on Saturday morning—a few cavalrymen picketing the other side of the Potomac.

Our whole force is across the river. The Potomac is falling rapidly.

Gen. LEE is retreating his main force by way Strasburgh and Staunton, not by Culpepper.

The Late Invasion.

THE REBELS AT WILLIAMSPORT.

Mr. THOMAS O. HARTER, a Government detective, who was arrested by the rebels and subsequently managed to escape, tells the following story of his observations:

"He learned that the rebels had commenced to make preparations to cross the river as early as Monday week, 6th inst., when they first began to arrive at Williamsport from Gettysburgh.

At Williamsport there were only two flatboats or scows at hand; each of which was capable of carrying about forty men and two wagons at a single trip. In this way they crossed a large number of wagons, sick and wounded soldiers and prisoners. This mode of transit being very slow, necessity compelled them to adopt a more expeditious mode to escape the threatened attack of MEADE's army, of which some appeared to have a great dread.

To construct a pontoon bridge was decided on, and forthwith the contents of a lumber-yard at Williamsport was appropriated, and men were set to work immediately building scows—nine of which were finished on Monday last, and floated down to Falling Waters. These scows were covered over with boards, forming a substantial pontoon bridge. The crossing of LEE's main force commenced on Monday, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and all got over late that night. Most of the infantry, and lighter troops, forded the water, which was breast deep, and many were drowned, but the artillery all crossed on the pontoon bridge at Falling Waters.

Mr. HARTER saw thousands of cattle swimming across the Potomac, and learned that from the time the rebels first came into Maryland, scarcely a day passed that they did not pass over large droves of cattle, sheep and horses in the same way, the product of their thieving operations in Pennsylvania and Maryland.

Mr. HARTER on Monday mixed with the rebel soldiers before they commenced to cross, and had a good opportunity of learning their feelings. Many of the line officers and privates openly expressed their disgust at the failure of the campaign in Pennsylvania, and avowed themselves as sick and tired of the war.

In one case a rebel soldier stopped at a farm-house to get a drink of water, and being supplied left his gun standing near the house. The farmer called out to him that he had forgotten his gun. The soldier replied:

"—— the gun. I'm sick and tired of it, and the war too. I'll not take it along, as I shall never use it any more. If you want it you can keep it;" and off he went, leaving the gun with the farmer.

THE REBELS AT M'CONNELLSBURGH, PA.

The editor of the Fulton Republican, published at McConnellsburgh, Pa., says that while the rebels occupied that town, his office was pointed out to them by the Copperheads as an Abolition concern. Several of the officers called upon him, and asked to see his files. After examining them, the Lieutenant in command said: "I see, Sir, this is a Republican paper; you advocate a vigorous prosecution of the war, and are in favor of sustaining your Government in everything. I like to see a man one thing or another." Taking several copies of the paper, they left without molesting anything in the office, to the great indignation of the Copperheads of that place.

RECAPITULATION.

12 officers killed, 51 wounded; 118 enlisted men killed, 523 wounded, 75 missing. Total, 779.

The brigade went into action with 1,837 officers and men; lost 779, being nearly 45 per cent. of the entire number.

Col. BREWSTER, with a detachment of the brigade, recaptured three pieces of artillery, which had been taken by the rebels, taking from one of them the colors of the Eighth Florida, and bringing in the Major and thirty men of that regiment.

The Payment of Troops.

PHILADELPHIA, Monday, July 20.

Gov. CURTIN was present at a meeting of Bank Presidents to-day, and arranged for the payment of all the State troops called out during the late emergency. They will all be paid before being mustered out. Good feeling prevailed among all parties, and the Bank Presidents evinced the best disposition to aid the State in her defence.

A Shaker Shot by a Soldier.

BOSTON, Monday, July 20.

At Concord, N. H., on Saturday, CALVIN DYER, a well-known Enfield Shaker, was shot by a soldier named THOMAS WEBB, and is not expected to live. The difficulty related to some children whom WEBB had placed in care of the Enfield Shakers.

The Results—Incidents—The Night Attack Upon the Enemy's Train, &c.

From Our Special Correspondent.

FALLING WATERS, Md.,
Wednesday, July 15, 1863.

In addition to the battles of Beverly Ford, Aldie, Middleburgh and Upperville, now matters of history, I have to record fifteen more engagements of our cavalry with the enemy, in thirteen of which cavalry was exclusively used, with flying artillery—all within sixteen days. I have already furnished you with brief accounts of these battles as they have transpired—such as could be hastily prepared when prostrated by fatigue produced by physical exertion and the loss of sleep, and laboring under the depressing effect of a relapse from the wildest excitement and while seated on the wet grass or under a dripping tree—valuable time, in which companions sought repose. But how describe fifteen battles in sixteen days? To do the subject justice would require the pen of a VICTOR HUGO and as much time as was consumed in the preparation of Les Miserables. Surrounded as I am at this moment by all the paraphernalia of actual war, deadly contest still raging within hearing, aye, within full sight of my temporary abode, fully expecting the enemy to force me upon the road at any moment, should our arms meet with but a temporary and even the slightest reverse—it is impossible to describe with that minuteness of detail desirable, the scenes of strife that have passed under my own observation in the brief space of time mentioned. The whole scene, as reviewed at this time, seems more like a dream than a reality. Fighting by day, and marching and sometimes fighting at night, in thunderstorms, crossing mountains and fording swollen rivers—with a wily, relentless foe both in front and flank, made desperate by his situation—a river in his rear, with only one pontoon and almost without a train, and a large victorious army in front pressing him into his lair.

In attempting to write this résumé, I am prompted quite as much to the task by a desire to do justice to the noble dead who sleep in a soldier's grave, to those now suffering from wounds received, to the survivors who have passed through these terrible ordeals unscathed, and last to the cavalry arm of the service, as I am with any hope of presenting anything particularly new. Shame! shame! that while our volunteers are freely laying their lives upon the altar of their country—fighting battles and suffering all the trials and exposure incident to active military life—that now, when death and disease has thinned their ranks, and the necessities of the country require more men, there can be found those at home who have the effrontery to resist the means adopted to secure so desirable an end. Could the men engaged in the recent disturbance in New-York have heard the indignation expressed by our soldiers when they first read of the riot in New-York, from newspapers scattered along the column to-day, and the wish that they could be led against that mob, they would never dare look a soldier in the face again.

On the 25th of June, after the battles of Aldie, Middleburgh and Upperville, the cavalry moved forward to Leesburgh, thence across the Potomac at Edwards' Ferry to Poolesville, passing through Seneca Mills, Middlebrook, Doub's Station, Jefferson, to Frederick City. At this point the force was divided, and went in different directions. As Gen. KILPATRICK was placed in command of the largest division, and being a man of fertile genius, whose heart is in the cause in which he is engaged—and withal, one of the most dashing cavalry officers in the United States or any other service, the writer concluded that his duty to the paper he represented required him to proceed with a command which promised so much. For once his judgment was not at fault. The experience of the last ten days has proved quite conclusively that the third division of the cavalry is the place for representatives of newspapers in search of either news, fatigue or fighting.

Leaving Frederick on Sunday, the 28th, Walkerville, Mount Pleasant, Liberty, Johnsville, Middleburgh, Taneytown and Littlestown were passed through, without any important event to record; and on the 30th, (Tuesday,) Hanover was reached. As the troops crossed the line into Pennsylvania, their spirits seemed to be revived by the fertile fields and homelike scenes around them. Cheerfully they moved on—many of them, alas! too soon, to their last resting-place.

THE BATTLE AT HANOVER.

At about midday Gen. KILPATRICK, with his command, was passing through Hanover, in York County, Penn.—a town containing 3,000 inhabitants—and when the rear of Gen. FARNSWORTH's brigade had arrived at the easterly end of the place, Gen. CUSTER's brigade having advanced to Abbottsville, Gen. STUART made a simultaneous attack upon his rear and right flank. The attack was entirely a surprise, as no enemy had been reported in the vicinity; and under any ordinary General, or less brave troops, so sudden and impetuous was the first charge, the whole command would have been thrown into the wildest confusion, and, as a necessary consequence, suffered a severe loss and a disastrous defeat. The force was in the hands of a master. Speedily making his dispositions, the General hurled upon the insolent and advancing enemy the Fifth New-York cavalry—a regiment never known to falter in an emergency. Gen. STUART in person led the charging column, and the Fifth was led by Gen. FARNSWORTH and Major HAMMOND. For some time the contest hung in the balance, but Gen. CUSTER's brigade returning after a sever struggle, which lasted nearly four hours, the enemy was forced to retire. They lost in this encounter a stand of colors, fifty men—ten of whom were killed—and included among the latter was Capt. JAMES DICKENSON, of Baltimore, attached to the Tenth Virginia cavalry. Lieut.-Col. PAYNE, of the same regiment was taken prisoner, together with forty others—officers of the line, non-commissioned officers and privates. It was in this fight that the Adjutant of the Fifth New-York, Lieut. GAUL, lost his life while gallantly leading his men.

As the cavalry by the battles at Aldie and Upperville, prevented the rebel STUART from marching his column through Maryland and Pennsylvania by the way of Edwards' Ferry and Boonsboro, so did the whipping of him at Hanover prevent further marauding excursions toward the centre of the State.

STUART and EARLY, the marauding chiefs of the rebel army, when they heard that KILPATRICK was on their track, abandoned the disgraceful work they were engaged in, and began to look about them for a safe exit from the State.

These legalized Dick Turpins had demanded tribute in almost every town visited by them, and threatened to destroy the towns unless their demands were promptly met. In some towns the citizens nobly refused to comply, but prepared rather to sacrifice their property than to yield to the invader. In many places, I regret to say, the reverse of all this was acted upon. At York, a town of 12,000 inhabitants, the Chief Burgomaster, a man named SMALL, rode seven miles to surrender the town, and before any demand had been made for its surrender, Gen. EARLY condescended to say, that if in the course of his peregrinations York was visited, he would consider the surrender as an ameliorating circumstance. Visiting the place, he demanded a ransom of $100,000 and a supply of provisions and clothing for his whole command. A committee of citizens was actually formed, and $45,000 in greenbacks and the required provisions were turned over to the EARLY aforesaid, who magnanimously offered to spare the town then, provided the balance of the money demanded was paid upon his return, which he said would be within a few days. Fortunately, Gen. KILPATRICK'S troops frightened this pink of Generals away, and the citizens of York and vicinity were saved the opportunity of further humiliating themselves.

On the Saturday previous to arriving in Hanover, 150 of STUART'S cavalry entered that place, and did pretty much as they pleased, not one of the 3,000 inhabitants daring to remonstrate or raise a finger in self-defence. In fact it appears they met more friends than enemies—for they found those who gave them information as to the movements of our troops, and were thereby enabled to make the sudden attack they did upon the rear of Gen. FARNSWORTH'S brigade the following Tuesday. Indeed, I have had in my possession a letter written by FITZHUGH LEE, and addressed to Gen. STUART on the very morning of the attack, giving a correct account of Gen. KILPATRICK'S movements—"obtained," he says, "from a citizen, and is reliable." There was no "reliable citizen" in all Pennsylvania to inform Gen. KILPATRICK of the approach of Gen. STUART upon the rear of Gen. FARNSWORTH'S brigade; and our commanders throughout the campaign in that State, labored under almost as many disadvantages as if campaigning in an enemy's country. Indeed, not until we arrived near Gettysburgh, could any valuable information as to the enemy's movements be obtained. In conversation with the editor of a paper in Hanover, whom I accidentally met, after showing him the letter of FITZHUGH LEE, I made the remark that the rebels appeared to have a great many sympathizers in that vicinity. He replied, "I don't know as to that, but you see this is a very strong Democratic County, and the Democrats were opposed to the removal of McCLELLAN!" Leading and active Union men were pointed out by the traitors, who seek to mask their treason under the garb of Democracy in this town, that they might be plundered by the marauders. One man, a jeweler, was thus pointed out, and his stock in trade, though concealed, was unearthed, and divided among the rebel soldiers. In Hanover, and at other points—particularly in York County—the enemy found warm friends ready to welcome them, and actually received some recruits for their army. Women at the Washington Hotel in York degraded themselves by waving their handkerchiefs in token of welcome to the rebel troops, and there were a number of citizens who spread tables for the officers, and invited them to their houses. At Mechanicsville, one "Democrat" was so buoyant, that he mounted a sword, and guided the rebel column to the railroad junction, where they destroyed a large amount of property. There seemed to be a perfect understanding between the enemy and men whose loyalty had been questioned before. One of this class recovered nine horses from STUART; "they were taken by mistake." The keeper of a hotel at Abbottstown—who, I regret to say, was once a leading "Wide Awake"—also manifested his pleasure at receiving a visit from the rebels. Fortunately, even the Democrats of York County have seen all they wish of rebels—a column of whom can be smelled as far as a slave-ship. A majority of the women in Hanover and elsewhere are truly loyal. They cared for the wounded—even taking them from the streets while bullets were flying around promiscuously. They furnished provisions to the soldiers, and in most instances, positively refusing to receive any pay. In one instance, a citizen voluntarily exchanged horses with a scout to enable the latter to escape.

While our troops were engaged at Hanover, another rebel force made a dash at Littlestown, with a view of capturing a train near that place. Lieut.-Col. ALEXANDER and Capt. ARMSTRONG happened to be near the spot at the time, and repulsed the enemy with the Fifth and Sixth Michigan regiments.

Before visiting Pennsylvania, there is not a shade of doubt but what the rebels expected to secure a large acquisition to their force as soon as the State was invaded; 75,000 men was the number they everywhere, in Maryland and Virginia, told the citizens, as they passed along, would join them. But your Copperhead is a man of words, and when asked to fight, many of them, at least, suddenly began to love the Union. The enemy lost more men by desertion in Pennsylvania than they received in recruits.

A little boy named SMITH, 12 years of age, who came out as bugler in the first Maine cavalry, was active in the fight, and had a horse killed under him at Hanover. Since that time he has been adopted as an aid by Gen. KILPATRICK, and is always to be seen near the General, whether in a charge or elsewhere. Since Hanover he has had another horse killed under him, and one wounded.

Wednesday, July 2, Gen. KILPATRICK made a forced march to the vicinity of Heidlersberg, to intercept STUART, who was moving toward the main body of the rebel army. Unfortunately, the information of this movement came too late; the enemy had passed the point indicated two hours before the head of the column reached it. In the then jaded condition of the horses, it was impossible to continue the pursuit, and the command fell back several miles, and bivouacked for the night.

THE BATTLE AT HUNTERSTOWN.

Thursday, July 2, Gen. KILPATRICK moved his whole command upon Hunterstown, and driving in the enemy's pickets, attacked the left flank of the army. Gen. GREGG'S command had the day before been fighting the enemy at Gettysburgh, and held the hill west of the town until driven from it by the artillerymen attached to the Eleventh corps—a position which cost many valuable lives to retake.

The column did not reach Hunterstown until 4 o'clock P. M., when a squadron of the Eighteenth Pennsylvania cavalry, headed by Capt. EGRES, charged through and drove the enemy back upon his reserve on the Gettysburgh road. After surveying the position, Gen. FARNSWORTH'S brigade was ordered on a road to the right leading to Cashtown, and Gen. CUSTER'S brigade was placed to the left. Company A, Capt. THOMPSON, of the Sixth Michigan, was ordered to charge upon the rebel force then in sight; at the same time two companies of the Sixth were deployed as skirmishers in a wheat-field obliquely to the road, so as to pour in a raking fire upon the enemy should the force sent forward be repulsed. The charge ordered was made, Gen. CUSTER and Capt. THOMPSON leading it. The company was repulsed, and the enemy came charging down the road at a fearful rate, yelling like fiends. But their tune was soon changed. Two shells from ELDER'S battery, together with a flank fire from the Michiganders in the wheat-field, soon brought them to an about face. PENNINGTON'S battery was soon in position, and a regular artillery duel commenced, and was continued until after nightfall. Our fire was very destructive to the enemy, as prisoners of rank have since admitted. Capt. THOMPSON was severely wounded, two men were killed, and some twenty-five were wounded. The enemy's loss must have been very severe, for they left three dead Lieutenants on our hands and a dozen or more of their wounded. In the charge made, a boy named CHADWICK, of the First Michigan, took an active part, and succeeded in killing a man who was trying to kill Gen. CUSTER, whose horse had been shot in the mêlée.

Having repulsed the enemy, Gen. KILPATRICK received orders to join the main command at "Two Taverns," which place was reached at about 4 o'clock Friday morning, July 3. Three hours afterward the whole command was again in motion, and, by 11 o'clock, made a dash upon the right flank of the enemy, with a view of destroying his train, if possible, and, at all events, creating a diversion. Owing to a misunderstanding, one brigade (Gen. CUSTER'S) of this division went to the right, and, consequently, the first object mentioned was not accomplished, but the second was fully. It was known that the enemy would mass his forces on Friday, for the purpose of breaking our right. The sudden and unexpected attack of Gen. KILPATRICK on his own right caused the enemy to fear a flank movement in that direction, and changed the character of the battle from attack to simply defensive. Unexpectedly hearing heavy firing, and receiving a brisk attack on the right flank and rear, the enemy sent forward a large force of infantry to coöperate with the cavalry, then being pressed back. Having had their skirmishers driven from the woods, the enemy took a strong position behind two stone and rail fences, one a few rods in the rear of the other, and a similar fence on the flanks of Gen. KILPATRICK was anxious to carry this position, because, if successful, the enemy's ammunition train could be reached. Every means had been used to start the enemy for a charge, but unsuccessfully. The First Vermont, Col. PRESTON; First Virginia, Maj. CORTHELL, and the Eighteenth Pennsylvania cavalry, Col. BRINTON, were in position to charge. The First Vermont, First Virginia and a squadron of the Eighteenth Pennsylvania, led by Gen. FARNSWORTH, dashed forward at the word until the stone wall was reached. A few men pulled the rail fence away from the top of the wall. Gen. FARNSWORTH leaped his horse over, and was followed by the First Vermont—the enemy breaking before them and taking a position behind the second fence. The few rods between the two fences where our men crossed was a fearfully dangerous place, the little fence receiving the concentrated fire of three lines, from front and both flanks. The witnesses of the movement stood in breathless silence—their blood running cold as the chargers gained the second fence. Man after man was seen to fall—Gen. FARNSWORTH among the rest. "He is killed!" gasped many a one, looking at that fatal spot; but no—that tall form and slouched hat are his—he lives—and all breathe again. His horse had been killed; a soldier gives him his horse; the General again mounts and dashes on. The enemy here make a more formidable stand, but are driven away, and the whole force go dashing, reeling over the fence in a whirlpool of shot and shell, such as is seldom ever witnessed by soldiers. The constant roar of musketry and artillery on the main field gave to the scene a peculiar grandeur. It was fearfully grand. The second fence crossed, and new fires were opened upon this brave band. To retreat at that point was certain death, and the only chance of safety was to advance, and advance they did for between one and two miles, to the rear of the rebel army, in sight of the coveted train—but at what a cost! Dispersing, the men returned under a galling fire as best they could. A few did not get back to their command for hours—many never came. The list of missing gradually lessened, and hope led us to look anxiously for the return of Gen. FARNSWORTH; and when, with the morning's dawn, no tidings from him were heard, then hope said he was wounded—a prisoner—he has been left seriously, perhaps dangerously, wounded at some house by the roadside. Vain hope! Messengers were sent in every direction to search for the missing spirit. It did not seem possible that he could be dead; and yet, so it was. He fell just after crossing the second fence, his bowels pierced by five bullets. There some of the Vermont boys, left behind at the hospital, found his body two days after the fight, and saw it decently interred. The brave, noble and generous FARNSWORTH has gone to his last rest, and the sod that covers his grave has been wet by the tears of those who loved and honored him while living. His name will ever be held in remembrance by every member of the Third division.

Of the three squadrons of the Vermont regiment in the advance in this charge, there were 15 killed, 15 wounded, and 20 or more are missing. The regiment lost 75 men during the fight.

This was the last charge of the day at this point. It caused the enemy to concentrate a still larger force upon his right flank until their whole line fell back. Night soon came on, and with it a drenching shower, in which the cavalry, exhausted with the labors of the day, retired two miles and sought such repose as could be obtained in an open field.

The day had been exceedingly hot and many men were prostrated by the heat. The Fifth New-York supported a battery which was exposed to a very hot fire. A shell passed through the body of DANIEL HURLEY, Company C, killed a horse, and wounded JOHN BUCKLEY, of the same company.

Saturday morning, July 4, it became known that the enemy was in full retreat, and Gen. KILPATRICK moved on to destroy his train and harass his column. A heavy rain fell all day, and the traveling was anything but agreeable. We arrived at Emmetsburgh—one of the strongest secesh villages to be found—about midday, during a severe storm. After a short halt the column moved forward again, and at Fountaindale, just at dark, we commenced ascending the mountain. Imagine a long column of cavalry winding its way up the mountain, on a road dug out of the mountain side, which sloped at an angle of 30 degrees—just wide enough for four horses to march abreast—on one side a deep abyss and on the other an impassable barrier, in the shape of a steep embankment; the hour 10 o'clock at night, a drizzling rain falling, the sky overcast, and so dark as literally not to be able to see one's own hand if placed within a foot of the organs of vision; the whole command, both men and animals worn out with fatigue and loss of sleep; then imagine that, just as the head of this tired, hungry and sleepy column nears the crest of the mountain, a piece of cannon belches forth fire and smoke and destructive missiles directly in front. Imagine all this, and a little more, and the reader can then form some idea of what occurred to Gen. KILPATRICK'S command, on Saturday night, July 4, as it ascended the mountain to the Monterey Gap, and so across to Waterloo on the western slope. The column commenced to ascend the mountain at about dark, and arrived near the Monterey House, at the top, between 9 and 10 o'clock. The enemy had planted a piece of artillery near this spot, so as to command the road, and also had sharpshooters on the flanks. It was intended to make a strong defence here, as one half mile beyond the enemy's train was crossing the mountain on the Gettysburgh and Hagerstown pike. The Fifth Michigan cavalry was in advance, and although on the look out for just such an occurrence, it startled the whole column; a volley of musketry was fired by a concealed force at the same time at the head of the column; the first squadron of the Fifth broke, fell back upon the second and broke that—but there was no such thing as running back a great ways on that road; it was jammed with men and horses. The broken squadron immediately rallied, and skirmishers were posted on the most available points, and the First Virginia, Major CORTHELL, was ordered to the front, and upon arriving there were ordered to charge; and charge they did at a rapid gait down the mountain side into the inky darkness before them, accompanied by a detachment of the First Ohio, Capt. JONES. As anticipated, the train was struck, just in rear of the centre, at the crossing one half mile west of the Monterey House. A volley is fired as the train is reached. "Do you surrender?" "Yes," is the response, and on the First Virginia dash to Ringgold, ordering the cowed and frightened train-guard to surrender, as they swept along for eight miles, where the head of the train was reached. Here the two hundred men who started on the charge had been reduced to twenty-five, and seizing upon a good position the rebels made a stand. As the force in front could not be seen, Major CORTHELL decided not to proceed further but to await daylight and reinforcements. Both came and the enemy fled. Arriving at Gettysburgh Pike, the Eighteenth Pennsylvania was placed there as a guard; for protection a barricade was hastily thrown up. No sooner was this done than cavalry were heard charging down the road. "Who comes there, &c.?" calls out the officer in charge at the barricade. "Tenth Virginia cavalry!" was the reply, "To h—l with you, Tenth Virginia cavalry," and the squadron fired a volley into the darkness. That was the last heard of the Tenth Virginia cavalry that night, until numbers of the regiment came straggling in and gave themselves up as prisoners of war. Other cavalry moved up and down the road upon which the train was standing, and some most amusing scenes occurred. The train belonged to EWELL'S division, and had in it also a large number of private carriages and teams, containing officers' baggage. Four regiments were doing guard duty, but as they judged of the future by the past, they supposed our army would rest two or three months after winning a battle, and magnanimously permit the defeated enemy to get away his stores and ordnance, and have a little time also to recruit, and therefore the attack was a complete surprise. A thunderstorm was prevailing at the time, and the attack was so entirely unexpected that there was a general panic among both guard and teamsters. I am not surprised at this, for the howling of the storm, the rushing of water down the mountain side, and the roaring of the wind, altogether were certainly enough in that wild spot to test the nerves of the strongest. But when is added to this a volley of pistol and carbine shots occasionally, a slap on the back with the flat of a sword, and a hoarse voice giving the unfortunate wight the choice of surrendering or being shot, then added to this the fearful yells and imprecations of the men wild with excitement, all made up a scene certainly never excelled before in the regions of fancy. Two rebel Captains, two hours after the train had been captured, came up to one of the reserve commands and wanted to know what regiment that was—supposing it belonged to their own column. They discovered their mistake when Lieut. WHITAKER, of Gen. KILPATRICK'S Staff, presented a pistol and advised them to surrender their arms. Several other officers who might have easily escaped came in voluntarily and gave themselves up. Under so good subjection were the enemy that there was no necessity of making any change in teamsters or drivers—they voluntarily continuing right on in Uncle Sam's service as they had been in the Confederate service, until it was convenient to relieve them. At first the prisoners were corralled near the Monterey House. When the number had got to be large they were driven down the mountain toward Waterloo. A gang started off in this direction at about midnight—it was not prudent to wait until morning, for daylight might bring with it a retreating column of the enemy, and then all the prisoners would have been recaptured; finally, when near the Gettysburgh road crossing, a band of straggling rebels happened to fire into the head of the party from a spur of the mountain overlooking the road. Here was another panic, which alike affected guards and prisoners. The rain was falling in torrents, and the whole party, neither one knowing who this or the other was, rushed under the friendly shelter of a clump of trees. All of these prisoners might have, at that time, escaped. Hundreds did escape before daylight dawned.

It is impossible to tell the number of vehicles of all descriptions captured; the road was crowded with them for at least ten miles; there were ambulances filled with wounded officers and privates from the battle-field of Gettysburgh; ambulances containing EWELL'S, EARLY'S and other officers' baggage; ambulances filled with delicacies stolen from stores in Pennsylvania; four and six mule and horse teams; some filled with barrels of molasses, others with flour, hams, meal, clothing, ladies' and children's shoes and under-clothing—mainly obtained from the frightened inhabitants of York County and vicinity; wagons stolen from Uncle Sam with the "U. S." still upon them; wagons stolen from Pennsylvania and loyal Maryland farmers; wagons and ambulances made for the Confederate Government, (a poor imitation of our own;) wagons from North Carolina and wagons from Tennessee—a mongrel train—all stolen, or what is still worse—paid for in Confederate notes, made payable six months after the recognition of the Southern Confederacy by the United States Government—or in other words—never. After daylight a lot of the wagons were parked and burnt at Ringgold; hundreds were burnt in the road where captured. Our men filled their canteens with molasses and replenished their stock of clothing, sugar, salt and bacon. Some very expensive Confederate uniforms were captured; several gold watches and articles of jewelry were found. A few of the captured wagons (the best) were saved, and to the balance, with contents, the torch was applied. The road here is more like the bed of a rocky river, the dirt having been washed away by the heavy rains, left large boulders exposed; where there were no boulders, there was mud and water. Over this road the troopers dashed and splashed in the midnight darkness, yelling like demons. Is it to be wondered at that the Confederate soldiers unanimously declare that they never will visit Pennsylvania again?

The Fifth New-York was pushed forward to Smithsburgh early on Sunday morning, but found only a small picket to interrupt their progress, and this ran away upon their approach. This town was held by the Fifth until the arrival of the main column, at a late hour in the day.

When the First Vermont, Lieut.-Col. PRESTON, had reached the Monterey House Saturday night, it was detached to aid in the main object of the expedition, by intercepting a portion of the rebel train which it was believed might possibly be in the advance. At the Mountain House, at about 12 o'clock midnight, Col. PRESTON took the left hand road, and moving in a southwesterly direction down the mountain, passed through Smithsburgh and Lightersburgh to Hagers town, arriving there soon after daylight, without meeting with any team, and scarcely meeting an armed enemy. A drove of cattle and something like one hundred rebel soldiers, stragglers, were captured, and were brought into the main column Sunday night.

The head of the column, as I have said before, reached Ringgold at about daylight—the whole command, horses as well as men, tired, hungry, sleepy, wet, and covered with mud. Men and animals yielded to the demands of exhausted nature, and the column had not been at a halt many minutes before all fell asleep where they stood. Under the friendly protection of the dripping eaves of a chapel, a gay and gallant Brigadier could have been seen enjoying in the mud one of those sound sleeps only obtained through fatigue, his long golden locks matted with the soil of Pennsylvania. Near him, in the mud, lay a dandyish Adjutant, equally oblivious and unmindful of his toilet, upon which he generally bestows so much attention. Under a fence near at hand is reclining a well got up Major, whose stylish appearance and regular features have turned the heads of many fair damsels on Chestnut-street; here a chaplain, there a trooper, a commanding General, aids, orderlies and servants, here for the nonce meet on a level. The faithful trooper lies by his horse, between whom there seems to exist an indescribable community of feeling. Two hours are thus passed in sleep—the Provost Guard only on duty—when word is passed that "the column has all closed up," which is the signal to move on again. The indefatigable EGRES shakes himself and proceeds to shake the Commanding General to let him know that the object for which the halt was made had been accomplished; that it is time to move. Five minutes more all are in the saddle again and marching for Smithsburgh. A body of armed men, mailed in mud! what a picture. Smithsburgh was reached by 9 o'clock A. M. The reception met with there made all forget the trials of the night—made them forget even their fatigue. It was Sunday. The sun shone forth brightly: young misses lined the street-sides singing patriotic songs; the General was showered with flowers, and the General and troops were cheered until reëchoed by the mountain sides; young ladies and matrons assailed the column with words of welcome and large plates heaped up with pyramids of white bread spread with jelly and butter, inviting all to partake. While the young sang, the old shed tears and wrung the hands of those nearest to them. The little town was overflowing with patriotism and thankfulness at the arrival of their preservers. While these things were detaining the column, the band struck up "Hail Columbia," followed by the "Star Spangled Banner." Many eyes unused to tears were wet then. The kind reception met with here did the command more good than a week's rest. Even the horses—faithful animals—seemed to be revived by the patriotic demonstration. No one who participated in the raid of Saturday night, July 4, 1863, can ever forget the reception met with at Smithsburgh. It was like an oasis in the desert—a green spot in the soldier's life. May God prosper the people of Smithsburgh.

THE BATTLE AT SMITHSBURGH.

Here Gen. KILPATRICK decided to let his command rest until evening. But the enemy were on the alert, and seemed determined not to let the troops rest. At about 2 o'clock P. M., Assistant Adjt.-Gen. EGRES, accompanied by scout MCCULLOUGH and a correspondent, started out to carry dispatches to the headquarters of the army, then near Gettysburgh. It was known that the enemy's pickets and patrols were scattered about promiscuously, and a considerable degree of caution was necessary to avoid being captured. At the suggestion of the scout, a route passing a little north of Emmetsburgh was selected as being the most practicable. The trio started off in good spirits, and had gone about six miles up into the mountain when suddenly they came to within one hundred yards of seven armed rebels—the advance, as it suddenly proved to be, of a large column of cavalry and mounted infantry in pursuit of Gen. KILPATRICK. The rebels ordered the trio to surrender, and at the same moment fired. Instead of surrendering, the party wheeled their horses and dashed off down the rocky mountain road at a breakneck speed, the rebels following them. For nearly four miles the race was continued, sometimes the pursued gaining a little and sometimes the pursuing party. The race was interrupted by meeting one of our cavalry patrols. A squadron, and then a regiment, was thrown out to keep the enemy in check, until the prisoners who had been started on this road could be sent off on another towards Boonsboro. While this was going on another column was reported to be approaching from a northeasterly direction, on the road which the Vermont cavalry had passed over at an early hour in the morning. Gen. KILPATRICK, having got his prisoners off in safety, was in his element, and declared his intention not to leave town until the time agreed upon, evening, notwithstanding the force confronting him was much larger than his own. The enemy had evidently intended to attack him from two points simultaneously, but upon trying at one point, and seeing what splendid disposition Gen. KILPATRICK had made of his force they undoubtedly arrived at the conclusion that the town could be taken only by a greater sacrifice of life than the result to be attained thereby warranted. They opened a battery on a hill commanding the town, several shells from which struck houses in town during the engagement, doing considerable damage. ELDER'S battery was opened to respond. The attack was kept up until nightfall, when the enemy, having failed in several attempts to charge into the town, suspended operations, and Gen. KILPATRICK slowly retired, and reached Boonsboro the same night. In this contest the enemy displayed their usual cunning. They, it has since been ascertained, had picked up about seventy-five of our men—stragglers and men whose horses had given out. While the fight was going on at Smithburgh, these men were exposed in an open field with the avowed intention of attracting our fire. It was the only force thus openly exposed.

In the affair at Smithsburgh, in the disposition of his troops, Gen. KILPATRICK displayed generalship of a high order. Nearly surrounded by a much superior force, he so arranged his command that he could concentrate just so many as might be required to repel an attack at any point, and still from no one point on the field could one-fourth of his command be seen. The enemy being on the mountain side, had a better view, and they did not like it.

At dusk the prisoners having got well away, Gen. KILPATRICK moved off slowly, and at 11 o'clock that night reached Boonsboro. The enemy did not follow.

On this march a sad affair occurred. A private of the Fifth New-York, who was much intoxicated, deliberately and without cause killed Lieut. WILLIAMSON, of ELDER'S battery, by shooting him with a pistol. The man in the vicinity immediately killed the offending trooper. Lieut. W. was an excellent officer, and much respected in the command.

THE BATTLE OF HAGERSTOWN AND WILLIAMSPORT.

Early on Monday morning, July 6, Gen. KILPATRICK, hearing that the enemy had a train near Hagerstown, moved upon that place. The enemy's pickets were met near the edge of the town. A squadron of the Eighteenth Pennsylvania cavalry, under Capt. LINDSEY, and led by Lieut.-Col. BRINLEY, of the Eighteenth, and accompanied by Capts. DAHLGREN, late of Gen. HOOKER'S Staff, and CHAUNCEY RUSSELL and SNYDER, of Gen. KILPATRICK'S Staff, and a scout, charged into the town.

The enemy's advance was commanded by Col. DAVIS, of the Tenth Virginia cavalry, who was captured. The party charged up the first street into town fifty rods, to where it enters Potomac-street. The scout was a little in advance. Col. DAVIS, likely to escape, by the superior fleetness of the horse he rode, the scout fired and killed the horse. The main portion of the party turned to the right, up Potomac-street, and charged through the town, through the square, past the market, running the gauntlet of a shower of bullets fired from streets, alleys and houses. Of this party, Capt. SNYDER, of the Eighteenth, was wounded and taken prisoner. Lieut. CAMPBELL, of the Eighteenth, had his horse killed; the scout had the end of his nose grazed by a ball; THOMAS HOGAN, standard bearer, kept up with the advance, and was killed; ISAAC ANDERSON was killed. THOMAS ADAMS, Company B, Eighteenth; Sergt. J. B. GORDON, Company A, Eighteenth; Lieut. DAVID MCKAY and others were wounded.

Capts. DAHLGREN and LINDSEY turned to the left as they entered Potomac-street, in pursuit of five men. The men took the first street to the right, and were closely followed. One took deliberate aim at Capt. LINDSEY and killed him. Capt. DAHLGREN immediately split the man's head open with his sabre, and so the fight was kept up for some time.

Soon after the first charge a second charge was made by a second squadron of the Eighteenth, under Capts. CUNNINGHAM and PENNYPACKER. Of this party only one returned that day. Capt. ELDER then opened his battery in the outskirts of the town and began an effective fire. While the battery was not in use he went on a reconnoissance to a piece of woods at his right and captured twenty troopers, the advance of a party attempting to make a flank movement and capture his pieces. Capt. ELDER had his horse killed. Deployed in the gardens and fields in the outskirts of the town, were portions of the First Virginia and First Vermont cavalry. A squadron of the First Virginia, numbering fifty-six men, under Capt. WM. G. CARMAN, lost twenty-six men; one officer, Lieut. SWINTZEL, was killed, and several others were wounded. To the right of the First Virginia was the First Vermont, deployed as skirmishers, and still further on the right was Gen. CUSTER'S brigade, the First, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Michigan regiments. Two companies—D, Lieut. CUMMINGS, and A, Lieut. EDWARDS—of the First Vermont, were deployed as skirmishers in the town. They advanced through a wheat field, drove the enemy from a fence on their front, when they were recalled to form in the rear guard. They lost fourteen men. Companies L, E and F, under Capt. SCHOFIELD and Lieut. NEWTON, were deployed to the right of the town, Company I, Lieut. CALDWELL, acting as a reserve force. L and E made one charge in skirmish line, and carried a house from behind which the enemy had annoyed our line seriously. These four companies lost fifteen men. The remainder of the Vermont regiment was held in reserve. It appears that the head of one of the enemy's columns, composed of infantry, cavalry and artillery, had just entered Hagerstown as Gen. KILPATRICK reached there. When the attack commenced, the fact was speedily discovered that there was a large force present, and it would be useless therefore to attempt to strike the train at this point, and Gen. KILPATRICK decided to move rapidly to Williamsport. This was a difficult movement to execute, but was successfully accomplished. Leaving the First Vermont and Fifth New-York with ELDER'S battery to protect the rear, the balance of the command was hurried forward. This rear guard had one of the sharpest fights of the campaign. Taking a position on the Williamsport road, they awaited the approach of the enemy. They were not kept long in suspense, for in less than half an hour the enemy advanced two columns of infantry and one of cavalry, each column numbering more men than the whole force ordered to hold them in check. Of course, it was an easy matter to flank our troops with such a command; but the rebels paid dearly for the advantage gained. The enemy had advanced through the line as our skirmishers retired. Our rear guard held their first position full half an hour after being attacked. The enemy advanced skirmishing, and made a dart for ELDER'S guns. They got so near that one gunner knocked a rebel down with his rammer. ELDER gave them grape and canister, and the Fifth New-York sabres, while the First Vermont used their carbines. The repulse was complete, but owing to the superior force of the enemy, our men were compelled reluctantly to fall back. At the second position taken there was another desperate contest, against odds. Here one of the bravest spirits fell—Lieut. WOODWARD, son of the Chaplain of the First Vermont. At one time Companies B and H First Vermont, Capt. BRAHAN, were entirely cut off, and they were ordered to "surrender!" "I don't see it," replied Capt. BRAHAN. "Who are you talking to," screamed the rebel officer? "To you," was the response, when the Captain, leaping a fence, was followed by the squadron, and nearly all escaped. Falling back again, two of the Vermont Companies were preparing to charge an advancing force, they yelled so loud that a portion of the force engaged at Williamsport supposed them to be rebels, and fired a couple of shells into their ranks. This mistake caused the charge to be abandoned, and our men fell back upon the main body. The officers and men of this rear guard behaved nobly, and many really shed tears because they could not carry out their orders to the letter. The First Vermont lost fifty men in this retreat. Lieut. STUART, of Company G; Lieut. CALDWELL, of Company I, and Sergt. HILL, of Company C, were among the wounded. STUART and HILL were left upon the field.

It was 4 o'clock P. M. when Gen. KILPATRICK, with the main column, reached the crest of the hill overlooking Williamsport on the Boonsboro pike. Gen. BUFORD'S command had been engaged with the enemy two or three miles to the left for two or more hours; Maj. MADILL, of the Eighth Illinois, had already fallen mortally wounded. Two pieces of PENNINGTON'S battery were placed on the brow of the hill to the right of the pike, and the other pieces to the left. A squadron of Fifth Michiganders had previously charged down the pike, driving in the enemy's picket and a battalion which occupied an advanced position. The First Michigan, Col. TOWER, was deployed as skirmishers to the right, and ordered to drive the enemy from a brick house a little in advance and to the right of the artillery. Several unsuccessful attempts were made to obey this order; but before it could be done, the brisk firing of the rear guard warned the Commanding General that his force occupied a dangerous position. Never was a command in a more critical situation; never before was man cooler or did one display more real generalship than Gen. KILPATRICK on this occasion. Tapping his boot with his whip, and peering in the direction of the rapidly-approaching rear guard, he saw it falling back apparently in some disorder. Not a moment was to be lost; inaction or indecision would have proved fatal, and the moral effect of a successful campaign destroyed in an hour. Fortunately Gen. KILPATRICK was cool and defiant, and felt the responsibility resting upon him. This made him master of the situation, and by a dashing movement saved the cavalry corps from disaster. Seeing his rear guard falling back, he bethought himself of what force could be withdrawn from the front in safety. The enemy were pressing his front and rear—the crisis had arrived; he ordered the Second New-York (HARRIS' Light,) to charge upon the exultant foe then coming like an avalanche upon his rear. Nobly did this band of heroes perform their task. They fell into the breach with a yell, and sword in hand drove back the enemy, relieving the exhausted rear guard, and holding the enemy in check until the whole command was disposed of so as to fall back, which they did in good order, fighting as they went. For three miles, over one of the worst roads ever traveled by man, was this retreat conducted, when the enemy, dispirited at their want of success in surrounding and capturing the whole command, halted, and the cavalry corps went into camp, men and officers, exhausted from the labors of the day, failing to sleep in the spot where they halted. Col. DEVINS' brigade, of Gen. BUFORD'S command, had relieved the rear guard and were harrassed by the enemy all night. Several times an advance was attempted, but on each occasion they were handsomely repulsed, in which work of Gen. KILPATRICK'S Staff, and a scout, charged into the town. the Ninth New-York cavalry took a conspicuous part. On this day Col. DEVINS' advance destroyed twenty wagons between Williamsport and Falling Waters. When PENNINGTON'S battery was being placed in the first position on the hill above Williamsport, the enemy, by concentrating their fire upon that spot, endeavored to drive the battery away. A perfect shower of shot and shell fell in and around it. There was no flinching, however. PENNINGTON was there, Gen. KILPATRICK was there. Had they succeeded in this attempt our force, by the enemy advancing in overwhelming numbers, would have been scattered to the four winds.

THE BATTLES AT AND NEAR BOONSBORO, FUNKTOWN AND ANTIETAM CREEK.

Tuesday morning, July 7, the cavalry force moved back to Boonsboro, the enemy following closely the rear guard, and at intervals there was brisk skirmishing between Gen. BUFORD'S command and the enemy. The same was true of the night. The Sixth cavalry, (regulars,) under Capt. CHAPLAIN, made a reconnoissance at night and had a brisk fight, in which they lost eight or nine men. Wednesday morning there were indications that the enemy were present in large force, and by 10 o'clock the "fandango" opened in real earnest, in which both BUFORD'S and KILPATRICK'S troops participated. The enemy were forced back to the Antietam Creek. Thursday the fight was renewed, and again on Friday, when Funktown was occupied. Saturday the enemy was again forced back, and on Saturday Gen. KILPATRICK'S command again moved upon Hagerstown.

THE SECOND BATTLE AT HAGERSTOWN.

When within two miles of the town, the enemy's skirmishers were met. The main feature of this battle and those that took place between Boonsboro and Hagerstown, I have before pretty fully described, and therefore I shall now only record some incidents in connection with them, omitted in the haste of the moment in my previous reports. After fighting for an hour the town was fully occupied, and the enemy fell back to the crest of the hill, 1½ miles west of the town. The streets picketed by the enemy were barricaded, and the troops were disposed of outside of town so as to resist an attack. In clearing the outskirts of the town of skirmishers, the One Hundred and Fifty-seventh New-York infantry, of Gen. AMES' brigade, (Eleventh corps,) rendered material assistance. Upon entering the town, the hearts of our troops were made glad by finding between thirty and forty Union soldiers who had been missing since the Monday before, a majority of whom were supposed to be dead. A few were wounded; all had been concealed by citizens, and had been treated well. Capt. SNYDER, reported killed, was found wounded at the Franklin Hotel, carefully attended by a bevy of lovely damsels. The ball entered at the right side of the abdomen, and was taken out on the left side. The wound, though severe, is not a mortal one. He also received a severe sabre cut on the top of his head. Capt. SNYDER rode some 300 yards after he was shot and used his sabre freely, when he fell to the pavement near the hotel, where he was taken in and kindly cared for by the proprietor. Capt. CARMAN, of the First Virginia cavalry, was also concealed. He was skirmishing with his company on Monday, and suddenly a whole regiment of infantry rose before his command. They had been concealed in a field of wheat. He lost five men on the first volley, when those remaining sought a place of safety. Capt. CARMAN fell flat on the ground in a potato patch, and was passed by unnoticed. Capt. MACQUILLET, of the same regiment, was wounded, but managed to conceal himself, was found by a rebel, who robbed him of $200, watch, &c., and was finally taken into the house of a citizen. Capt. MASTERS, of Gen. KILPATRICK'S Staff, had his horse killed here. A large majority of the citizens of this town are loyal, and they were much gratified when the Union troops reoccupied the place. The rebels treated the citizens the same as they had done people in Pennsylvania—that is, took everything they could carry away. Not satisfied with taking articles for their own immediate use, the officers as well as men went so far as to steal dresses, hoop-skirts and other articles of clothing for their wives and sweethearts.

On Monday, the 13th, Gen. KILPATRICK was anxious to make an advance, but could not obtain orders. Some of the Pennsylvania militia were placed at his disposal, and he thought he would try one regiment under fire. The Philadelphia Blues was selected and, accompanied by the First Vermont cavalry, a demonstration was made on our right—the enemy then occupying a fortified position. The militia were then deployed, and it was somewhat interesting to see how different individuals acted as they came under fire for the first time. Some laughed, others cracked jokes. Many were serious and wore a determined aspect. For new troops, however, they acted creditably. The General desired them to move to the crest of a knoll where the bullets were flying pretty lively. There was some hesitancy at first, whereupon the battle-flag presented to the division by the ladies of Boonsboro was sent to the front. Sergt. W. JUDY, bearer of the flag, cried out, "This is Gen. KILPATRICK'S Battle-flag, follow it!" The militia obeyed the summons promptly. JUDY was wounded, and fell some distance in front of the line, and it was supposed for some time that the enemy had captured the flag; but at night, when JUDY was brought in on a litter, he proudly waved the battle-flag. The novelty of being under fire for the first time was keenly felt by the militia. About the first man touched had the top of his head grazed just close enough to draw blood. He halted, threw down his musket, truly an astonished man. One or two officers and a dozen or more privates also ran up to see what the matter was. Running both hands over his pate and seeing blood, he exclaimed, "A ball, I believe," while the others stood agape with astonishment, until the shrill voice of the General sounded in their ears, "Move on there!" Another man's throat was so closely grazed by a ball as to raise a large bunch, but without breaking the skin. A council was held to ascertain whether he was hit by a ball or not. Despite the danger, these and similar acts caused much amusement to the men more used to exposure.

Gen. KILPATRICK was much annoyed at the restraint he was under all day Monday and Tuesday; he desired to move on, believing that the enemy, while making a show of force, was crossing the river. This subsequently proved to be correct. Had the army advanced on Tuesday morning, LEE'S whole army would either have been captured or dispersed. When on Wednesday morning an advance was made without orders, the fact was then ascertained that the enemy commenced falling back when the attack was made by the First Vermont and Pennsylvania militia the day before, the enemy believing that it was the initiatory fire and ran. While the Eighth Illinois was charging a barn near this point, Major MERRILL fell, mortally wounded, while gallantly leading his men. This brigade was relieved by the one commanded by Col. DEVIN.

THE RIGHT AT GETTYSBURGH.

But little has been said of the part taken by the cavalry on the right at Gettysburgh, Friday, July 3. Geh. GREGG's division, assisted by Gen. CUSTER's brigade of Gen. KILPATRICK's division, rendered an important service here. The enemy seemed determined to capture our batteries and turn the flank. The movement was only prevented through the stubborn bravery of the troops. The Seventh Michigan, a new regiment, charged up to a stone wall under a front and flank fire from a concealed enemy—charging in column by company, closed en masse. When the first company reached the wall, and was brought to a sudden stand-still, the balance of the column, being in a very exposed position, was thrown into some confusion. The regiment was recalled, when the First Michigan, Col. LIBBE, made a more successful charge. A Colonel of the rebel army, who was subsequently captured, told me that the artillery firing at this point, (PENNINGTON'S battery,) was the best he ever witnessed. At one battery, he says, six of the eight gunners at each gun were either killed or wounded in less than 20 minutes.

DEVIN'S BRIGADE AT GETTYSBURGH.

Gen. DEVIN'S brigade of Gen. PLEASANTON'S division, reached Gettysburgh Tuesday, June 30, drove the enemy out and were most cordially received by the people. The following morning the brigade took a position at the west of the town, when skirmishing was immediately commenced. At this point Capt. HANLEY, of the Ninth New-York, with 100 men, held the enemy's skirmishers at bay for two hours, and finally drove them. Unfortunately, soon after this, as the enemy reinforced, advanced again, one of the unfortunate mistakes occurred; a battery opened upon our own men, and by the combined attack, front and rear, the position was lost.

RECONNOISSANCES.

On Tuesday, June 30, Capt. DAHLGREN applied at the headquarters of the army for permission to make a reconnoissance. He asked for 100 men, but could only obtain ten. With these he hovered around the enemy's line of communication, and was at one time in sight of the enemy's ammunition train. If the 100 men had been furnished him he could have destroyed this train, and the enemy would have been out of ammunition at Gettysburgh. Capturing a messenger of JEFF. DAVIS' and destroying a pontoon bridge at Williamsport, Capt. DAHLGREN returned to headquarters. Then 100 men from the Sixth New-York cavalry were furnished him, and he started out immediately again. At Greencastle and Waynesboro Capt. D. had several fights with the enemy. At the latter place he arrived just in time to prevent the citizens from paying tribute to STUART's men, under JENKINS. He captured 400 men and 2 pieces of artillery, when the enemy came upon him in superior force, recaptured all except 22 prisoners, and the 2 guns. Capt. D. had his horse killed, and escaped by crawling into the bushes. He made the citizens arm themselves and assist in defending the place, and when the enemy reappeared, the citizens conducted the prisoners to a place of safety in the mountains. At Waynesboro, when JENKINS made a demand to see the authorities, they referred him to Capt. DAHLGREN, who, with his men, were drawn up in line of battle in another part of the town. JENKINS sent word that he would hang Capt. DAHLGREN and his men if they did not leave. They did not leave, however; a fight ensued, resulting in JENKINS being driven back six miles. JENKINS had five times as many men as DAHLGREN. On this reconnoissance Capt. D. destroyed 176 loaded wagons, captured 1 wagon, 2 Captains and 11 men.

July 2. Capt. COFFIN, of the Ninth New-York, with 80 men, was sent from near Gettysburgh up the Hagerstown Pike on an important mission, which he successfully accomplished. He ascertained the exact position of the enemy and the whereabouts of his train, which would have been destroyed but for the error made in the movements of one of Gen. KILPATRICK's brigades.

In this and previous accounts sent to the TIMES, I have made no attempt to give full details of the movements of the cavalry division commanded by Gens. BUFORD and GREGG, because it was impossible to do so—each division, during most of the campaign, having acted independently, or, if cooperating, at such distance from each other as to preclude the possibility of communicating directly. What has been said of these divisions is only incidental—when one or both have cooperated on the same field with divisions commanded by Gen. KILPATRICK. The country has reason to feel proud of the whole cavalry force commanded by Gen. STONEMAN. As a whole, a more mobile and braver band of troopers never were brought into one command before; and I believe with others, that if the whole Army of the Potomac could be turned into a cavalry force, and one-half of each regiment armed with the new seven-shooter, such as the Sixth and Seventh Michigan regiments have, the whole rebel army could be annihilated in six months—that is, if a man of dash, like KILPATRICK, was placed at their head, untrammeled by Mrs. Partingtons.

WHAT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED.

In sixteen days, one division of our cavalry has had fifteen battles, with infantry in nearly all to contend against, captured and destroyed nearly or quite 1,000 loaded wagons, and between three and four thousand horses and mules; taken between four and five thousand rebel prisoners, destroyed one-half of the rebel Gen. STUART's cavalry force, and so demoralized the balance that when a green (or blue) militia regiment, (the Philadelphia Blues,) with a regiment of Green Mountain Boys, attacked them while posted behind earthworks at Hagerstown, the whole command fled panic-stricken—or at Williamsport, where CUSTER's brigade of Michigande[illegible] with PENNINGTON's battery, captured more than ma[illegible] for man from an enemy whose force consisted of four times their numbers, and strongly located behind earthworks. This is cavalry fighting, the superior of which the world never saw. The cavalry also contributed largely to the success of our arms at Gettysburgh.

THE FLYING ARTILLERY.

In claiming these results for the cavalry arm of the service, the Flying artillery with it must not be forgotten. I speak more particularly of PENNINGTON's and ELDER's batteries, because circumstances have placed me in the way of realising their worth. These batteries have contributed materially to the successes of the cavalry. Both the officers who command these batteries and the officers under them, are peculiarly well qualified to fill their positions, by reason of their experience, combined with a thorough knowledge of their branch of the profession of arms, and also from the fact that their hearts are in the work they have in hand.

This letter has already become too lengthy, or I would refer to the able surgeons attached to the cavalry command, of the skill and untiring industry of which this branch of the service can boast, as demonstrated in the persons of PANCOAST, CAPEHART, PHILLIPS and others; of the patriotic ladies in the towns through which this command has passed during the last three weeks—especially the ladies of Boonsboro—who with their own fair hands made and presented flags to the commanders of several brigades; but these matters must be reserved for a more fitting occasion.

The following named persons were in the Washington Hotel Hospital, Hagerstown, July 14:

Sergt. J. W. Woodbury, 1st Vermont cavalry—wounded in leg.

W. Judy, 1st Ohio, color bearer to Gen. Kilpatrick's Body Guard—thigh.

J. S. Merritt, 1st Vermont cavalry—arm.

P. Welsh, 1st Michigan cavalry—back.

Daniel Horton, 18th Pennsylvania cavalry—shoulder.

J. M. Austin, 7th Michigan cavalry—scalp.

S. M. Conklin, 18th Pennsylvania cavalry—shoulder.

Geo. S. Spofford, 1st Vermont cavalry—arm.

Albert Shew, Philadelphia Blue Reserves—shoulder.

Robert McNutt, Philadelphia Blue Reserves—breast.

—Lieut.-Commander ABNER READ.

On the 7th inst. there was an engagement at Donaldsonville, on the Mississippi river, between a band of guerrillas and two of the gunboats of Admiral Farragut's squadron, which resulted in the loss to the country of as brave and gallant an officer as ever walked a deck—Lieut.-Commander ABNER READ, of the United States Navy. Lieut.-Commander READ entered the navy on the 2d of March, 1839, having been appointed from Ohio, of which State he was a native. Of the twenty-four years that he passed in the service, sixteen were spent at sea and a portion of the remaining eight he was employed on shore duty. There is nothing in the record against him throughout this long period but what is creditable to his faithfulness and efficiency. Returning from his last cruise, in October, 1861, (then a Lieutenant,) he was placed in command of the purchased gunboat New-London, and ordered to the Gulf of Mexico, at about the same time that the military expedition under Gen. BUTLER departed for its rendezvous at Ship Island. Here Lieut. READ did most excellent service, not alone in protecting the landing of the troops against a threatened attack of a rebel naval force from Mobile, but in annoying the enemy by breaking up the communication between New-Orleans and Mobile via Mississippi Sound. The New-London, although an inferior craft, being technically classed among the "paper ships" of the Navy, won for herself the title of the "terror of the Sound." Her light draught enabled her to navigate the shallow waters between the chain of low islands that outly the shores of Mississippi and Louisiana, and whenever our troops contemplated one of their frequent raids upon the main land—to Biloxi, Pascagoula, or some other of the Southern watering places on the Sound—the New-London invariably went to cover the landing. On these occasions there would often be a brief contest with rebel gunboats in which Lieut. READ was certain to drive off his antagonists, and occasionally capture a cotton or tar-laden schooner. During the five months that the New-London took this for her cruising ground, she made many valuable prizes of coasting craft, that were endeavoring to escape with cargoes for Havana; several of these vessels being steamers that, after the capture of New-Orleans, were extremely useful in the transportation of troops from Ship Island to that city. Indeed, it has been well said of Lieut. Read that, while commanding the New-London, he did more hard work and hard fighting, single-handed, than any other officer in the service. His activity and daring were the themes of praise by every person connected with the Western Gulf Squadron. In the month of July, 1862, he was promoted to be Lieutenant Commander, and, still in command of the New-London, was very useful in patroling Lake Pontchartrain, preventing contraband traffic between Secessionists at New-Orleans and their friends across the Lake. Afterward he was ordered to the blockade of the Texan ports, and two months ago he lost an eye in an affair with the rebels at Sabine Pass. Last month he was transferred from the New-London to the command of one of the new steam sloops-of-war, the Monongahela, a vessel in every way better suited to his ability. It was while fighting his ship against the guerrilla bands that have been annoying, with field pieces, the transportation between New-Orleans and Port Hudson, that he was mortally wounded by the bursting of a shell. His death is a loss to the country, and it will be sincerely regretted throughout the navy, for his was one of those generous, whole-souled natures that win universal love and respect.

—Capt. Lewis H. Lent.

Among the names of those who fell, on the 10th inst., in the assault upon Fort Wagner, on Morris Island, near Charleston, is that of Capt. LEWIS H. LENT, commanding Company A, Forty-eighth New-York Volunteers. Capt. LENT was a resident of this City, and at the opening of the war, was attached to the Seventh Regiment, in which he served as a private during the three months' campaign, making with his comrades the famous thirty miles' march from Annapolis to the railway junction en route to the defence of Washington. When the regiment returned to the City, young LENT was not long in determining to again enter the field, and the organization of the Forty-eighth Regiment in Brooklyn, under the Rev. Mr. PERRY, its first Colonel, (who died at Fort Pulaski, Ga.,) gave him the opportunity that he desired. Although Col. PERRY did not personally know the young man who presented himself with the request for a command, yet he was so favorably impressed with his fine physique and martial air, that he made him Captain of Company A, and to the day of his death he had no occasion to regret this confidence. In the various engagements, in which his regiment has engaged—at Fort Royal Ferry, Pocotaligo, Bluffton, and in several skirmishes—Capt. LENT conducted himself in such a way as to merit the commendation of his superior officers. By his company he was idolized, and he died while gallantly leading them. Among his brother officers he was much beloved for his many noble traits of character, and in this City a large social circle will miss his genial intercourse.

—Mr. ROBERT HOLMES, a well-known citizen of St. Louis, Mo., died suddenly in that city on Thursday last, of apoplexy. He had represented the county in the Legislature; was a member of the recent State Convention; and at the time of his death was a Judge of the County Court, a Director of the Pacific Railroad Company, a Director of the Boatmen's Savings Institution, and President of the Board of Public Schools. His uprightness, public spirit and devotion to the interests of the city, marked him for public confidence and private esteem.

Translation from L'Opinion National, June 27, 1863.

True and great popularity only attaches itself to powerful personalities. There is an essential distinction to be made between popularity and the infatuation with which people are sometimes affected for a man, which a circumstance elevates, and which accidentally draws the public attention toward him, but which a simple accident will again dissipate.

Men truly superior in themselves do not fall thus. Greatness, on the contrary, furnish them with occasions to place the gifts they have received from nature and the qualities they have acquired in prominence. Such a man is Mr. SEWARD.

Mr. SEWARD is, under the Presidency of Mr. LINCOLN, that which BOLINGBROKE was in the reign of Queen ANNE, and PITT under GEORGE III. He has the influence and all the attributes of a first Minister, though not the title. He is at the same time Minister of State, and Minister for Foreign Affairs. On reading the second volume of his Diplomatic Correspondence which has just been published for the year 1862, comprising one thousand pages, one is firmly convinced that, did he have the sole initiative, and the entire direction, the greater portion of the reverses experienced by the North would have been avoided, and the Union perhaps already restored.

We must, in a measure, recall the life of Mr. SEWARD, in order to judge and to comprehend how grand and legitimate is the influence he exercises.

Mr. SEWARD was born in Auburn, in the State of New-York, on the 16th of May, 1801. His political career commenced in 1830. During several years he retained a seat in the Senate at Albany, and twice, in the years 1838 and 1840, he was elected Governor of the State of New-York. He had been inaugurated but a few months, when in 1839, the Governor of Virginia demanded that three sailors, men of color, accused of having facilitated the escape of a slave, should be delivered by him to the authorities of Virginia. This extradition Mr. SEWARD refused, basing his refusal on the fact that that act, which is denounced as a crime by the Governor of Virginia, was considered a meritorious act in the State of New-York. The correspondence exchanged on this subject created a great sensation, and placed the young Governor of the State of New-York at the head of the Anti-Slavery movement.

In the year 1848, when Gen. TAYLOR was elected to the Presidency, Mr. SEWARD was elected to the Senate of the United States. He was reelected in 1855, and was still occupying his seat, in 1861, when Mr. LINCOLN confided to him the Secretaryship of State, and the portfolio of foreign affairs.

Mr. SEWARD rapidly acquired a popularity in the Federal Senate which increased from year to year. It is to him that California owes the inappreciable advantage of having been admitted into the Union as a free State, and from that time he had the courage to call public attention to the imminence of a conflict between free and slave labor. He cannot be accused of having raised a difficulty, or of having created a situation; he had the merit of exposing it, and had the courage to declare before a Pro-Slavery majority that, in his opinion, there were no sacrifices which a great country should not make to assure the triumph of free labor.

In 1858, during the adjournment of Congress, he delivered an oration at Rochester in the State of New-York, which oration would not only make an epoch in the history of an orator, but in the history of a country. The words "irrepressible conflict," which have become celebrated, are found in that speech.

"Slavery," he said, "is an increasing ulcer, which should be efficaciously circumscribed, if it is not wished it should invade the entire country.

The country cannot remain half slave and half free. It must be entirely either the one or the other."

Never had the subject of Slavery been exposed with so much clearness and energy.

The South felt the blow so heavily that it did not lose an instant, but prepared for the conflict. The North also understood that it was necessary to act with force against slave interests, or liberty would soon end.

It was while the public was in this frame of mind that the period for the Presidential election (which occurs every four years) arrived. Mr. SEWARD was naturally the candidate of the Republican party, but in the exasperated state of the South, it was thought more prudent to prefer a candidate apparently less exclusive than he. Mr. LINCOLN was devoted to ideas of liberty and progress, but he had taken a less active, and a less brilliant part in the political struggles of the last twelve years.

Mr. SEWARD showed no despite, and did not hesitate for a single instant to assume the heaviest portion of the responsibility in the Cabinet of the new President.

On his arrival into power, seven States were already separated; abroad the United States were represented by men who were all compromised in the secession movement. He offered the South the greatest concessions, asking them only in return to proclaim the non-extension of Slavery. The occasion His offers of conciliation met with are well known. He soon, however, more fortunate abroad, for he succeeded in changing the entire personal diplomatique, without any difficulty arising therefrom.

Mr. SEWARD is the true modern statesman. Reverses are by him met calmly, and success does not elate him. His firm and straightforward conduct has conciliated the esteem of his adversaries, and those who before the war considered themselves his most mortal foes, to-day pay homage to his loyalty. He has had the merit to cause it to be admitted as an invariable rule of conduct, that no greater measure of rigor should be applied than is actually indispensable to secure the supremacy of the National Government and to tend to reestablish the National Union.

As Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. SEWARD has always shown the same conciliatory policy, and if the United States have hitherto avoided any foreign complications, they owe it alone to his wisdom. Mr. SEWARD attaches the greatest value to keeping the national honor intact. He thinks a Government can attain this object better by a loyal and generous course of conduct, than by intimidation and brute force. His correspondence breathes conviction and honesty. Diplomacy should, according to his opinion, be open and without subterfuge, to seek for publicity rather than to avoid it, and finally not to permit public opinion to wander in false suppositions. Rulers are in his estimation, administrators, who should render as frequently as possible exact and complete accounts of their actions. A. MALESPINE.

The Colored State Convention.

This body assembled, pursuant to the call of the Committee of the Fremont Legion, on Thursday, the 16th inst., in Poughkeepsie, and organized by electing Rev. Dr. PENNINGTON as Chairman, NIMROD THOMPSON, of Buffalo, Vice Chairman, and Dr. P. B. RANDOLPH, of Utica, Secretary. A manifesto and call to the colored population, defining their position, and setting forth their hopes, was drawn up, together with a series of patriotic resolutions by the Secretary, and unanimously passed and adopted by the Convention.

It was determined to appoint agents of the Central Committee in each Congressional District, empowered to appoint sub-agents in each county or town, to enroll their respective colored forces immediately, reporting progress to the Chairman of the Central Committee, who is empowered to call a council of the Committee, or a State Convention, when he shall deem it expedient so to do. The Committee expect to raise from 10,000 to 20,000 colored troops in this State, and to materially assist the work in other States. The manifesto and resolutions will be issued in circular form immediately, and will be published in the official organs selected by the Convention, namely, the Principia and the Anglo-African. All colored men are called upon to make out lists of the men they can raise, and who are ready to enter the field, and are requested to transmit the same to the President of the Committee as speedily as possible.

THE BOND TO BE STAMPED.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
WASHINGTON, July 16, 1863.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 14th inst., I have the honor to state that the law is silent as to whether the bond or the mortgage shall be stamped; as the bond, however, is the primary evidence of the debt, and the mortgage merely an additional security, I prefer to recommend the stamping of the bond as the more business-like proceeding. In stamping either instrument, it is always to be remembered that the highest rate required on either the bond or the mortgage should be affixed.

Very respectfully, JOSEPH J. LEWIS,
Commissioner.

THE REBEL GENERAL KEMPER.—From Capt. DAVIS, of the One Hundred and Forty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, who arrived in this city yesterday from Gettysburgh, we learn that it is not true, as reported, that the rebel Gen. KEMPER was killed at the battle of Gettysburgh. He is now lying at Brean's Mill, three miles from Gettysburgh, having been shot through the breast, the ball lodging in his back. He was in command of a portion of the force comprising the forlorn hope of the rebels, and was wounded in the last desperate charge made by the latter to retrieve their lost ground.

When Gen. KEMPER fell, his Staff supposed him to have been wounded beyond recovery, and in order to save themselves from capture left him on the field, expecting he would die in a few moments. He was, however, found by our men in time to have his wounds attended to, and is now in a fair way of recovery. Both Union and rebel papers have reported him killed, and the latter do not yet know to the contrary. Gen. KEMPER is a Virginian.

Col. PATTON, of the Seventh Virginia (rebel) Infantry, and a State Senator elect to the rebel Virginia Legislature, was also left upon the field as dead; but he, too, is in a Federal hospital, and with a prospect of recovery.—Washington Star, July 17.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

RELIEF FOR THE COLORED PEOPLE.

Large Meeting of Merchants—Speeches by Jonathan Sturges, J. G. McKenzie, Richard Warren, A. F. Dow and Others—Resolutions Adopted Promising Protection to the Colored People—Contributions for their Relief.

Pursuant to the call published in yesterday's papers, a large meeting of merchants was held at McCULLOUGH'S salesrooms yesterday afternoon, to adopt measures for the relief of the colored sufferers from the late riots. The meeting was called to order by Mr. JONATHAN STURGES, the Chairman appointed at the preliminary meeting on Saturday, who spoke as follows:

SPEECH OF MR. STURGES.

For the information of those who were not present at the meeting held here on Saturday, it is proper that I should state its origin and object. The meeting was called on the suggestion of several gentlemen in Front-street, at a very short notice, to consider the destitute condition of the colored people of this City, who have been deprived of their homes, and their little property, by a mob during the past week, to devise means to relieve their immediate wants, and to secure them in their peaceable and honest labor hereafter. I have been forty-one years a merchant in my present location. During this period I have seen a noble race of merchants pass away. I cannot help calling to mind the many acts of charity which they performed during their lives. I hardly need to name them; you all know them. You all know how they sent relief to Southern cities when they were desolated by fire or pestilence; how they sent shiploads of food to the starving people of Ireland; this last act of brotherly love we have had the privilege of imitating during the past Winter; and as often as occasion requires I trust we shall be quick to continue these acts of humanity, thus showing that the race of New-York merchants is not deteriorating. We are now called upon to sympathize with a different class of our fellow-men. Those who know the colored people of this city, can testify to their being a peaceable, industrious people, having their own churches, Sunday Schools and charitable societies; and that as a class they seldom depend upon charity; they not only labor to support themselves, but to aid those who need aid. This is their general character, and it is our duty to see that they are protected in their lawful labors, to save themselves from becoming dependent on the charity of the City. We have now come together to devise means for their relief because they are colored people, but because they are, as a class, persecuted and in distress at the present moment. It is not necessary for our present purposes to inquire who the men are who have persecuted, robbed and murdered them. We know they are bad men, who have not done as they would be done by. Let us not follow their example, let us be quick to relieve those who are now in trouble, and should we ever find those who have persecuted the negroes, in like trouble, let us be quick to relieve them also, and thus obey the injunction of our Divine Master, "Bless those who persecute you."

At the conclusion of Mr. STURGES' remarks, Mr. J. G. McKENZIE, Chairman of the Committee of five appointed on Saturday to make arrangements for this meeting and to draft resolutions suitable to the occasion, presented the following REPORT.

The condition of the colored people of this City, who have recently been deprived of their kindred by murderers, of their homes by fire, and of their accustomed means of support, having been forcibly driven therefrom by an infuriated mob, without cause or provocation, is such as not only to excite the sympathy of every good member of the community of all parties and all creeds, but also demands and should receive prompt pecuniary assistance and aid.

That this may be effectually accomplished, we do hereby

Resolved, That a Committee of Five Merchants be appointed by the Chairman of this meeting, who, with the Treasurer of the fund to be collected, as a member of same, shall have full power to receive, collect and disburse funds in the purchase of necessary food and clothing, and in relieving the wants of the suffering colored population.

Resolved, That to said Committee are hereby granted full powers to assist all colored people whose property has been destroyed by the mob, in making the needful proof of the facts to obtain redress from the county, under the Statute laws of the State of New-York, and that they have authority to collect funds and employ counsel for that purpose.

Resolved, That we will exert all the influence we possess to protect the colored people of this City in their rights to pursue unmolested their lawful occupations, and we do hereby call upon the proper authorities to take immediate steps to afford them such protection.

Resolved, That we will not recognise or sanction any distinction of persons of whatever nation, religion or color, in their natural right to labor peaceably in their vocations for the support of themselves and those dependent upon them. And that, so far as we are able to contribute to the wants and necessities of our fellow-men, we shall be done without reference to these distinctions. And further, that what we now propose doing for the colored man, we shall ever be ready to do for any of our fellow-men under like circumstances.

In submitting the above resolutions, Mr. MCKENZIE said that this was not the time nor the place to talk about the causes that had been in operation for years past to produce the state of things which now exists. There was some excuse on all parties, but he believed there none present who did not believe in unhesitating obedience to law. [Great applause.] It was only by the maintenance of law that the rights of any one could be maintained. It was well that this question should be tested now—once and for all—whether New-York is to be governed by law or whether it is to be at the mercy of a mob. [Applause.] For one, he would rather see this City—the metropolis of the Western Continent—laid in ashes, than that the mob should triumph. [Prolonged applause.] This country could exist if New-York were destroyed, but if the foundations of law and order were to be broken up there was no safety for us as citizens or as countrymen. [Applause.] He did not believe that the so-called Conscription law had caused this riot. When lawless men with bludgeons in their hands go through our streets dictating the kind of laborers that shall be employed, or the terms of labor, it showed an agrarian spirit which aimed at your lives to make itself felt. After complimenting Archbishop HUGHES for his noble stand in favor of law and order, Mr. MCKENZIE closed by saying that he still had hopes of a future for this great country, and sincerely believed that we should yet see better times than we had ever seen in the past. There was no cause for discouragement for he had a firm belief that Almighty God would overrule our troubles for our own good, and would again reunite this once prosperous nation. [Continued applause.]

Mr. RICHARD WARREN next addressed the meeting. He said that he wished for a time to drop the veil over the scenes of the past week, and look at the dependent race of people who were now without the means of support, because men, claiming to be their superiors, had driven them from their homes, and destroyed or stolen from them all they possessed in the world. It had been his fortune, while President of the Board of Education, to become acquainted with a large portion of that class of our population, and he could testify to their being as industrious, faithful, honorable and intelligent as any class of similar position in our midst. The treatment to which they had been subjected during the past week was to him unaccountable. Only a few days ago he was notified that, if he permitted a faithful, honest and industrious black man, whom he had employed to do chores about his house, to enter his house again, his roof would be burned down over his head. "Great God" said he to himself "am I an American citizen, and shall I submit to this?" [Tremendous applause, lasting several minutes.] He did not, he continued, desire to excite any prejudices in the minds of his hearers either of nationality, race or religion. We had proclaimed this country to be, as it is, the refuge for the oppressed and the poor of all nations, but we certainly had a right to ask that when they came here they should show something of the same magnanimity, should conduct themselves as law-abiding citizens, and should be no longer foreigners, but Americans. He hoped there would be a generous response to the objects for which this meeting was held, and that the resolutions would be unanimously adopted. [Applause.]

Capt. E. NYE said that he was desired to make a statement, as coming from Gen. DIX, now commanding this department, that labor should be protected in this City at all hazards, and that those who wished to employ negroes or any other class of laborers might feel themselves perfectly secure in so doing. [Great applause.]

Rev. Mr. LOOMIS, Secretary of the Seamen's Friend Society, related several instances of outrages upon the blacks that had come under his personal observation, and read a letter received by him yesterday from an intelligent negro, now in New-Bedford, who had been driven thither by the persecutions of the mob, leaving behind him an invalid daughter, relative to whose fate he was anxious to hear.

Mr. EDWARD CROMWELL here announced that the Produce Exchange had just recieved $800 or $900 in contributions to the object for which the meeting was held. [Great applause.]

Mr. A. F. Dow said they had come together as business men sympathizing with suffering men. He had always felt a pride in seeing that in all works of charity, great or small, the merchants of this City take the most prominent part, and among them it had been a special source of pride that the grocers, to which class he belonged, were ever conspicuous. These colored people who now demanded our attention were perfectly innocent; they had done nothing to merit the treatment they had received. He had never seen or heard of anything so much like the action of wild beasts as the treatment of the mob toward these people. He hoped they had come there to act and to act promptly. They should put their hands in their pockets and give freely to these poor sufferers. He hoped that the merchants of this City would so express themselves that the colored people may know and feel that they have a home here—that they have friends, and that they shall hereafter be protected. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLINS suggested that a portion of the money subscribed for the relief of the colored people had better be given to the twenty-two Secretaries of the Society for Improving the Condition of the Poor, to be distributed by them, as they were familiar with all parts of the City and would be likely to know of the most pressing cases of want. He also stated that he had been informed that a portion of the money—$2,000 or more—which had been placed in the hands of the Mayor for distribution, would be devoted to the relief of the colored people.

Mr. SHULTZ, leather merchant, desired to suggest in reference to the statement of Mr. COLLINS, that the employment of negroes would hereafter be protected, that what was most needed now was for every man who had employed colored people to reinstate them in their places at once. This would be the best and most speedy relief that could be afforded them. [Applause.] The question had now come up whether the merchants of New-York had a right to employ such men as they see fit or not; and for one he was ready to meet it. [Grent applause.] Many had been in the habit of leaving this matter to the head-porter, but hereafter he proposed to attend to that business himself. [Tremendous applause.]

On motion of Mr. MCKENZIE, the Chairman of the meeting, Mr. STURGES, was appointed treasurer of the fund that might be collected, and the public are requested to send their contributions to him, at No. 125 Front-street.

The following sums were then contributed by persons present:

On motion, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That a copy of the resolutions adopted by this meeting be furnished to Maj.-Gen. JOHN A. DIX, and that he be requested to give notice to the colored people to return to their usual employments, with the assurance that they shall be properly protected.

Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting be tendered to Messrs. HOGG & Co. for the use of McCULLOUGH'S Salesroom for the second meeting in behalf of the colored people who have been driven from their homes.

The meeting then adjourned.

Legal Assistance Tendered to the Colored Sufferers.

We have seen a document to which are appended the signatures of many of our best known lawyers, which tendered on behalf of the signers legal assistance to the colored people who were despoiled of their goods or property during the recent riot. The City and county are liable for the damage done these poor people, and it is the benevolent intention of the legal gentlemen named, to prosecute the claims of any colored person who may desire it, and to follow up the matter without delay, and what is equally to the purpose, without charge. The offer is a great charity and speaks volumes in behalf of the sense of honor and of justice possessed by the Bar of our City.

BOARD OF COUNCILMEN.

STATED SESSION—MONDAY, July 20, 1863.

Four o'clock P. M.

The Board met pursuant to adjournment, in their Chamber, No. 15 City Hall.

Present—Councilmen [illegible], Cauldwell, Cox, Cooper, Gaw, Hardick, O'Brien, Sammis, Tappen, Tiemann, Van Tuyl, Vose, Vreeland, Wm. Walsh, Ward—16.

Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

Communication from the Mayor, transmitting a communication from the Commissioners of Health, relative to the Health Officer reporting yellow fever as existing in a most malignant form on vessels now arriving from Havana. To avoid the great danger which will arise from any such vessel or cargo coming up to the City, the Board adopted a resolution that no infected ship or cargo shall be permitted to pass the Quarantine Station. This is an effective and timely measure, and will remove all apprehensions of contagion.

BY THE NEW-JERSEY CENTRAL.—Four of the regiments alluded to yesterday as having come from Pennsylvania by the Camden and Amboy route, were landed in this City by the New-Jersey Central.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

We are still without any definite knowledge of the movements of the rebel army under LEE. The main body, however, is supposed to be somewhere between Winchester and Culpepper. Gen. MEADE is in active pursuit, and is expected to be soon heard from.

We have a report, by way of Corinth and Memphis, from Gen. HURLBUT'S scouts, that BRAGG is retreating precipitately into Georgia, followed by Gen. ROSECRANS, whose advance on the 17th was said to be at Rome. It is thought that BRAGG is endeavoring to make a junction with JOE JOHNSTON. Desertions from his army are numerous.

Maj.-Gen. ROSECRANS himself was in Nashville on July 17, and with Col. GODDARD, Chief of Staff, made a tour of the hospitals, inspected the convalescent camps and the three gunboats in port.

MORGAN has probably made his last raid for some time to come. Doubtless ere this himself and his entire band are captured. He made an unsuccessful attempt to cross the Ohio River on Sunday near Cooleysville, but was prevented by a gunboat. About one hundred and fifty rebels were killed or drowned, and a thousand of them were captured, with their artillery. Among the prisoners are Col. WARD and Col. DICK MORGAN, a brother of the rebel leader. BASIL DUKE is also said to be a prisoner. The rest of the band were scattered among the hills, and Gen. JUDAH, who is in pursuit, is confident of capturing the whole of them.

We learn by a dispatch from Boston that Hon. WM. WHITING, Solicitor of the Treasury, will leave for Europe in Wednesday's steamer on important business for the Government. His visit is supposed to have some reference to a fleet of powerful river steamers now fitting out in England, supposed for the rebel navy.

Fort Powhatan, which was taken possession of by our gunboats on the 13th, is on the south side of James River, and about eighty miles from its mouth.

FROM EUROPE.

By the arrival of the steamship Africa at Halifax, we have advices from Europe three days later. She left Liverpool on the 11th and Queenstown on the 12th inst. The English Press were still engaged in discussing the rebel invasion of the loyal States, and the probability of LEE'S success—generally taken for granted. The Morning Post says that Mr. LINDSAY was expected on the 13th to favor the House of Commons with a detailed account of his second interview with the Emperor NAPOLEON. Lord PALMERSTON had requested Mr. ROEBUCK to drop the further discussion of the question of recognition, as it was not desirable to resume it or to bind the Government to pledge themselves as to future action. Mr. ROEBUCK postponed his answer until the 13th. It is denied in Paris that Mr. DAYTON said the United States would consider the recognition of the rebels a casus belli. M. DROUYN DE LHUYS had asked Mr. DAYTON whether a first offer of mediation would be well received at Washington, and Mr. DAYTON had given a negative answer. Encounters between the Poles and Russians continue to be daily reported—the latter being generally defeated. There is no change to note in Cotton, Breadstuffs or Provisions. Consols were quoted at 92¼@92¾ for Money.

GENERAL NEWS.

A large meeting of merchants was held yesterday afternoon at MCCULLOUGH'S Salesroom, in Front-street, to adopt measures for the relief of the colored sufferers by the late riots. Speeches were made by JONATHAN STURGES, J. D. MCKENZIE, RICHARD WARREN, A. F. DOW and others, and resolutions were adopted pledging the protection of the merchants to the colored people in pursuing their customary avocations. A subscription was taken up and $5,131 86 was contributed on the spot. Further contributions may be sent to JONATHAN STURGES, No. 125 Front-street, who is treasurer of the fund.

The City Inspector reports 663 deaths during the past week, an excess of 196 over the previous week; 172 were men, 85 women, 218 boys and 193 girls; of the children 351 were under five years of age. The increase in the mortality is attributable, in a great degree, to the recent riots; fifty-eight persons are officially reported as having been killed in them, though, could the facts be ascertained, the number would, undoubtedly, be found much larger.

The Board of Councilmen were without a quorum at their meeting yesterday, and adjourned to Thursday.

We learn from Philadelphia that instructions have been issued to the various Provost-Marshals by which a negro is prohibited from being a substitute for a white man who is drafted. The order is in these words: "Any one who is equivalent for a person drafted may be received as a substitute, but a colored man, under existing laws, is not a military equivalent."

The transport steamer Daniel Webster, arrived at Philadelphia, on Saturday, with a load of prisoners from Fort Delaware, among them Gen. ARCHER and Staff, destined for one of the military departments of the West. It was currently reported that they had been removed from Fort Delaware in consequence of sickness there.

One of the four immense boilers of the iron-clad Tonawanda, now building at Philadelphia, has been placed on board the vessel. A second one was hauled to the Navy-yard on Saturday, and the other two are yet at the foundry of MERRICK & SONS. These boilers weigh about 30 tons, and considerable difficulty has been experienced in hauling them from the foundry to the yard.

There was an upward reaction in Gold Coin yesterday of ¾ ₱ cent., the price reaching 126@126 ¼ ₱ cent. Money easy at 6 ₱ cent. Stocks firm, and higher on New-York Central, Erie and some of the Western Roads.

Flour was less active yesterday, while Wheat and Corn were freely purchased at irregular and generally easier prices. Provisions attracted less attention, and were declining. A moderate business was reported in Sugars, Molasses, Hay, Tallow and Cotton, the latter article at reduced figures. Whisky was in good demand. The freight market was brisker. Other branches of trade were quiet and depressed.

The Cattle market is quite lively this week. Dressed meat has been selling at quite an advance during the week, owing to a scarcity, and now the wholesale butchers are anxious to buy. Prices have advanced ½c. ₱ lb. since last Monday—ranging at Forty-fourth-street, where 3,500 head are on sale, at 8½c.@9c. for common, 10½c. @11c. for fair to good, and 11½c. for choice animals—a few of the pick have brought 12c. Stock well sold out.

The Conscription Law and its Expounders.

There are many cogent reasons why the Conscription Act should be construed liberally. There is much that is penal in its character and incidents. It plunges a large portion of the community into anxiety and uncertainty before the names are drawn, and after they are drawn it unavoidably inflicts a large amount of hardship upon thousands of worthy men; and what is, if possible, of more importance than these things, is that, owing to the magnitude of the struggle which has called for it, it is, in the eyes of a large portion of the population a novel and it may be a vexatious law. The old militia laws, which it has superseded, were certainly tenfold more vexatious, and would, if carried out, have inflicted tenfold greater hardships. But then they never were enforced, because we have never before been engaged in a great war; and demagogues are consequently able to persuade those who never read them, and know nothing of their provisions, that the present act is an innovation, copied from the despotic models of Europe.

All this, however, should impress upon the Government the necessity for tact and discretion, and above all for liberality in construing it; and we must say we think that in some ways the Provost-Marshal-General is showing himself less attentive to this consideration than is desirable. The decision, for instance, that a man who presents himself for examination, believing honestly that he is physically disqualified, shall, if his claim for exemption be disallowed, be cut off from the privilege of commuting or furnishing a substitute, was in every sense of the word "sharp practice," and so sharp that we are glad to say it has been annulled. There is but one case in which such a rule could be for a moment defended, and that is where there was clear proof of an attempt to impose on the Examining Board, either by false representations, or by simulating disease or malformation. But to snap a man up, who would pay the three hundred dollars, if necessary, but who refrains from doing so because he sincerely believes he is physically disqualified, and put him into the ranks because his notion of his bodily condition happens to have been mistaken, is neither more nor less than inflicting a heavy penalty for mere misconception, and this is a power with which no Provost-Marshal should be armed. In fact, we are not at all sure that sound policy does not dictate the concession even to those who have been convicted of bad faith, of the benefit of the exemption clause, because the Surgeons will, after all, rely almost entirely upon their own skill in judging of a man's fitness for duty, and it is better that ten rogues should escape service by "shamming Abraham," than that one honest man should be forced into the ranks smarting under a sense of wrong or injustice.

There has been another decision recently promulgated which is even less defensible and more impolitic than the foregoing. We have been gravely informed that the payment of three hundred dollars exempts the person who pays it "for this draft;" and yet we are told in the same breath that the money thus received is to be religiously applied by the Government to the purchase of substitutes to take the places of those who thus escape. But if this is the case,—if when A pays the exemption fee, the War Department uses the money in getting B to volunteer in his stead, we should really like to know upon what principle A is to be called upon to pay another three hundred dollars in a second draft, when B may be actually serving in the ranks, or may have been killed or wounded on the field? If the money, in short, is spent in procuring substitutes for those who pay it, they are both, in justice and common sense, exempt for the period for which they would have served had they not paid it. There is no other interpretation of the statute which is not the sheerest absurdity.

How impolitic, too, this mode of construing the law is—and we can hardly believe that any lawyer has been guilty of it—is seen in the prevailing misconception amongst the poorer classes as to the use to be made of the exemption money. Much of the hostility to the law existing amongst them is due to the notion that when a man pays three hundred dollars, the money goes into the treasury for general purposes, and a further draft is made of those who are not able to pay—or, in other words, that for every rich man who escapes, an involuntary conscript has to be drafted. Nothing could be more foreign to the real purpose of the act than this arrangement would be, and yet nothing could do more to strengthen and propagate this mischievous delusion than the course the Government proposes to follow. Poor men may well ask, and do ask, how it is that if the money is to be expended in raising volunteers, it does not exempt those who pay it, in the same way, and for the same length of time, as if they procured substitutes themselves; and on being assured by the Provost-Marshal that it will not, they naturally conclude that the rich are simply paying a high tax in lieu of service, while the fighting will all have to be done by drafts of those who would pay it if they could, but could not if they would. The recent decisions, in fact, ought to be at once reviewed and amended, and the whole law ought to be enforced in its spirit, and not to the letter, even if the latter were to be inconsequential and vexatious as the Provost-Marshal-General is trying to persuade us.

How to Deal with Mobs.

The men, the very men, and only the men who, through two long years of agony, have been endeavoring to palliate the crimes of the rebels, are now doing all that they can to palliate the crimes of the rioters who passed the greater part of last week in endeavors to make New-York as infamous as Delhi or Cawnpore. During Monday and Tuesday they said all that could be said both to inflame the passions of the Thugs who were desecrating our streets by murder and pillage, and to excuse their ferocity, and as soon as the tumult was quelled by the strong hand of the law, they set to work both to predict its renewal and to preach forbearance and gentleness to the Police. It will not do any longer to tell people who have passed four nights in their houses with the hideous uproar of street massacres ringing in their ears, and the flames of their neighbors' houses reddening the sky above their heads, that this havoc was wrought either by "the people," or "the laboring population," or by "outraged conscripts." They know well that if these atrocious libels were true, it would be the duty of those who have enough manhood and religion left them to make them refuse to belong to a community of thieves and assassins, either to take their muskets and bring about a reform, or else quit the country. If either "the people" or "the laboring population" of New-York were fairly represented by the bands of brigands who cut throats and fired houses for four days, it would be an insult to every decent man in the City and the State to suppose that he would live in the same place with such a "people," or with such "laborers" one minute, after he had found it impossible to get them hanged or banished. These wretched apologists of assassination and arson evidently came to the conclusion that the troubles of the times had deprived the American people of their moral sense, and that there are men and women amongst us so besotted by party feeling as to have lost their horror of murder and cruelty, and their respect for property, whenever opponents of the Administration choose to sally out and kill, mutilate and rob.

One of the casuists who is now exerting on behalf of the Thugs of New-York an ingenuity which has been sharpened as well as depraved in the service of JEFFERSON DAVIS, took occasion on the last day of our bloody carnival, to instruct the authorities in the manner of dealing with such street mobs as —according to him—"the laboring population" furnished for "the Opposition" of last Monday. He reluctantly confesses that it may be necessary to club them, but he solemnly protests against the use of firearms or steel, as both unnecessary and irritating, and then insults the English Chartists by comparing the demonstrations of April, 1848, to the recent riots up town. The Chartist riots, says he, were put down by policemen, who knelt down in the mud and tapped the rioters on the shins with their clubs, and these New-York rioters may, in like manner, be routed by alternate applications of the same weapon to their shins and their heads; and he then advances the novel doctrine that men are most afraid of the weapon they are most familiar with, and that the Irishmen who flies from a cudgel, will receive a volley of musketry without flinching.

The necessities of the war have introduced into the vocabulary of public discussion the word "blatherskite," and the casuists aforesaid use it so often that when we pronounce the foregoing to be "blatherskite" of the purest kind, they will understand our meaning perfectly. As there was nothing in the riots of 1848 in common with those which have recently disgraced our streets, they supply us with no lesson that can be of service now. The Chartists neither murdered, nor pillaged, nor burnt. They simply gathered tumultuously, and offered no injury to anybody. Consequently, in this stage the Police were left to deal with them, and dealt with them successfully; but what our cotemporary carefully omits to mention is, that ten thousand troops of all arms, the cavalry with their swords previously sharpened by order, were on that occasion, by the Duke of WELLINGTON'S order, massed in the London barracks, ready to be launched upon the crowd the minute it gave symptoms of designs either against life or property.

Had there been a single murder committed, or a single house robbed in spite of the Police, nothing is more certain than that the military reserve would have been mercilessly used, because all who have any familiarity with mobs—and the English authorities have it—know well that a mob which has once shed blood with impunity instantly changes its character, and becomes a wild beast, both in its nature and its aims. Human blood whets its ferocity, and inflames its courage just as it does those of a tiger, and when, through accident or weakness, it has been allowed to draw ardor from this horrible source, it is mercy to it and to the community to assail it with musketry, and, if need be, with grape and canister. An officer who fails to do so at once at this stage is guilty, not simply of a blunder, but of a crime. This is one of the canons of the Police code of all nations, and its correctness will not be doubted by anybody except those who are trying to persuade us that ANDREWS and "KERRIGAN" are martyrs. The two greatest mobs of modern times were that of Lord GEORGE GORDON, and that which stormed the Tuileries on the famous 10th of August, and nobody of the millions who have read the horrid tale of their doings have ever risen up from it without inwardly cursing the weakness and folly which, in the guise of mercy, allowed each of them to hold a great city at their mercy until they had shaken men's faith in Providence by the monstrosity of their crimes.

The notion that mobs, and especially Irish mobs, are most frightened by clubs, because most familiar with their use is hardly worth refuting. A meagre knowledge, either of human nature or of the history of war, would prevent anybody from ever putting it into circulation. The Highlanders who followed CHARLES EDWARD to the field rushed headlong on musket and bayonet without qualm or hesitation, but the cannon made the boldest of them falter in his charge, for the simple reason that the weapon was new to him. And for the same reason the Bashibazouk, Arnout and Montenegrin of to-day, though brave as lions under the fire of infantry, are daunted by a single three-pounder. There is, in fact, in the whole category of weapons, none which has less terrors for a true-born Irishman than a cudgel. He inherits from ten generations of ancestors the closest familiarity with the worst and best that can come of its use; and in order to believe him terrified by it, as the friends of the rioters would have us, we should have first to discard the experience of the whole human race as to the effect of habit in deadening the nerves. For the dispersion of merely tumultuous gatherings, the club ought doubtless always to suffice; but upon a mob which has torn a man to pieces, and is shouting for more blood, we ought, in very tenderness for the mob itself, to say nothing of the rest of the community, pour as much ball-cartridge into it as will effectually scatter it.

Philadelphia and New-York.

The Philadelphia Press, and the Press all over the country, have administered a terrible castigation to New-York for the scenes exhibited in its streets last week. We will not say that a good deal of it is not deserved, though we wish they had drawn a clearer line between the rioters and the great mass of citizens in the Empire City. New-York is a very large town. By last census it had a population of over eight hundred thousand souls; and though the rioters had free sweep for several days, they never numbered more than two or three thousand. If the city were such a seething mass of corruption, lawlessness and villany as is represented, we should have seen a state of things that could not have been repressed by a few hundred policemen and soldiers. The fact is that the high character of New-York never appeared to better advantage than during the late riots. The mob took the City by surprise, and was carrying on its ravages before people generally were aware of its existence; but no sooner did the citizens see and comprehend the real upshot of the riot than they hastened, almost en masse, not merely to express their disapproval, but to enrol and arm themselves to repress disorder and sustain the laws.

The Philadelphia North American is more generous toward us than some other of our castigators. It only sets down one-eighth of New-Yorkers as outlaws. It will observe, however, that even this is very different from the state of things that used to exist in Sodom, and that if we have seven righteous men to one knave, we need not be afraid to compare notes with Philadelphia. It says:

"Swarms of men who have for half a century been found too turbulent and vicious to be permitted to live anywhere else, have found the atmosphere of New-York congenial. There, too, has been gathered in all the refuse population of the Free States of our own country—the genteel swindlers, the low demagogues, the rogues of all kinds, adventurers eager for any chance of gain, from cheating at cards to robbing a bank—New-York sucks them all into her grand reservoir; and there this foul and pestilential mass, rendered ranker and more offensive by the infusion of Southern outcasts, seethes and boils.

New-York has not less than a hundred thousand of them, divided thus: Women of the town, 20,000; thieves, 30,000; outlaws of all other kinds, 10,000; adventurers ready for any chance wind, 25,000; persons without any means of getting a living, 15,000. Or perhaps they might be better divided in the following manner: Refuse of Europe, 70,000; sweepings of the Free States, 20,000; driftwood from the South, 5,000; original products of New-York vice and crime, 5,000. They are the refuse of all climes and all peoples. Europe has vomited her paupers and criminals upon the shores of the Hudson. Periodically she has been cleaning out her prisons and workhouses, and poorhouses to furnish 'emigrants' to the United States. Every shade of European vice and crime is better represented in New-York than in Europe itself, until New-York has ceased to be an American city, typifying in any degree the order, industry and good habits of the American people."

This must be pleasant reading for the suburban residents of Philadelphia during these hot days. To think that we have among us twenty-five thousand "adventurers ready for any chance wind," must make even a Philadelphia lawyer hopeless of success amid the breezes of New-York; and to know that we have fifteen thousand "people who have no means of getting a living," must puzzle his brain as to how they manage to continue their existence; while to believe that New-York sucks in "all the refuse population of the North, and infuses into it the outcasts of the South," must surely make Philadelphia and the rural regions beyond the boundaries of Manhattan Island rather desirable places to live in. It is all nonsense, however. New-York has its share of adventurers and outlaws, but no more. It has perhaps more of them than Philadelphia, but it is a larger town. It has as good a record as any city in America, or in the world, for devotion to law and order. Riots are as rare here as anywhere else, and they are as efficaciously dealt with. The late riot is the first formidable one in the City since the beginning of the century, and it is not likely that another such will take place until after the close of the century.

We are glad to say a good word, however, for Philadelphia in the matter of the conscription; and we are the more glad to do so, as we had occasion lately to charge both the city and State with being laggard in the matter of raising volunteers to repel the invasion of LEE. The draft is now being carried out there with perfect quiet and decorum. The citizens don their conscript uniforms, or pay down their exemption money without a murmur. There is no opposition and no rioting, and there will be none.

Even while Philadelphia upbraids New-York, we can afford to commend our smaller sister; and though she would contrevert geography by denying the first City on the Continent the honor of being an American city at all, we will not belie facts or the census by denying her the honor of being only second in population, order, and public and private virtue to New-York.

MORGAN'S RAID.—It would seem that MORGAN and his men have come to grief. Their grand raid through Indiana and Ohio has resulted in nothing but their own capture and dispersion. MORGAN had some forty-five hundred men with him when he crossed the Ohio twenty days ago; and we judge from the various telegrams that have reached us, particularly those of this morning, that about half of his force has been killed and captured. The most important man in the whole expedition, the man who even more than MORGAN was its leader, Col. BASIL DUKE, is a prisoner in our hands. BASIL DUKE is a well-known Kentuckian, an old citizen of Covington, and it was his great ability, his skill and audacity, and his thorough acquaintance with the region of country on both sides of the Ohio, that gave to the marauders such impunity and success as they have enjoyed. Now that he is a prisoner, MORGAN will find it difficult to navigate, and we expect to see the remainder of his force completely dispersed. Several attempts have been made by them to cross the Ohio at different points, but they have all failed.

This raid has called to arms an immense number of the citizens of Ohio and Indiana—probably ten times as many as the entire force under MORGAN. Though the Western States have been so lavish in sending men to the army, they have still an immense force of fighters left. When our GRIERSON rode through Mississippi he reported that State bare of soldiers and of material for soldiers—that the Confederacy was but a shell; but MORGAN will have a very different report to make of his experiences in the Northwest. Armed men sprang from the ground by the thousand wherever he set his foot.

OUR CAVALRY.—An admirable and connected résumé of the recent extraordinary exploits of Gen. MEADE'S cavalry force will be found in the TIMES of this morning. Without perusing it, no one can have any idea of the brilliant service recently rendered by this arm. It was written in the field, "surrounded with all the paraphernalia of actual war, a deadly contest still raging within hearing," by a gentleman who accompanied the cavalry in all its gallopades, who was a witness, if not a participator, in all the battles, and who was wounded while in the discharge of his duty to us and the country. He begins his narrative by coolly saying: "I have to record fifteen more engagements of our cavalry with the enemy, all within sixteen days."

We venture to say that there never was a cavalry force of equal size, connected with any army, which did so much hard work, and rendered such effective service, as ours has done since the middle of May last. It should be five times larger than it is. If men cannot be raised for it at once, twenty regiments of infantry should be mounted and set to cavalry work. This plan has been tried in the West, and with great success. As the war progresses and draws to a close, cavalry will be more and more needed.

A Few Questions for Our Aldermen and Councilmen.

Has it occurred to you that if the City of New-York may, by a money appropriation, prevent the Government from obtaining soldiers under the Conscription act, every other city and town throughout the North may, with equal right do the same thing, and that thus the fundamental intent and object of the act—the raising of men—may be directly and wholly defeated?

Has it occurred to you that municipal legislation of this character, in direct conflict with a law of the country, must be necessarily and essentially illegal and void?

Have you ever deemed it worth your while to consider how you are to raise twenty-five hundred thousand dollars after passing your ordinance to that effect, and after having overridden the veto of the Mayor, as you have pledged yourselves to do in case he shall see fit to interpose his veto?

Do you imagine the capitalists of the North will be disposed to lend to the City of New-York this amount of money, to enable you to frustrate and nullify, so far as in you lies, the object and intent of a law of your country?

And if it should happen that there are men of means among us whose inclinations would lead them to cooperate with you for that end, do you fancy self-interest will allow them to give you their money for bonds which will in due time be pronounced invalid by the National Supreme Court, to which tribunal the question of the validity of such bonds would surely be carried, involving, as it does, that other momentous question whether a city or town may by its own simple legislation defeat the intent of an act of Congress?

If it were practicable and easy for you to raise the money you talk of, do you think it probable the General Government would quietly fold its hands and allow you to accomplish your scheme of nullification, pure and simple? Has it ever once struck you that there is a class of men in this City—men who own the houses, the stores, the foundries, the factories, the ships, the merchandise within this great metropolis—who have some rights which it is your business to protect?

Does the old story of that last ounce which broke the camel's back ever recur to you?

Has it ever seemed to you possible that there may be a limit to the endurance of this class of men and of all those other men whose fortune or misfortune it is to be decent, respectable, loyal citizens?

Do you feel certain that the fresh burden which you seem to be so willing, so anxious and so determined to thrust upon their backs, may not prove to be the unendurable last ounce?

Is it not obvious to you that sympathy with the rioters or rebels, or abject moral cowardice, will be considered the motive which leads you to legislate, at the expense of the decent portion of the community, in favor of the red-mouthed miscreants who roamed throughout our City last week, robbing and burning houses, stores and orphan asylums, beating and plundering thousands of quiet citizens, and torturing, maiming or murdering every negro they could lay their hands upon?

You know that under an existing State law the taxpayers of this City must pay for every dollar's worth of property stolen or destroyed by that mob; and do you now think it wise to undertake to compel the tax-payers to pay for each one of the savages who composed it, the sum of three hundred dollars, to enable him to evade his duty to his country, and to remain at home, while decent, law-abiding people, if drafted, are to pay for their own exemption, get a substitute or enter the ranks?

Do you perceive that the three glorious privileges which you propose to accord to the tax-payers of this City are: First, they shall pay for all property stolen, destroyed or damaged by the mob; second, they shall furnish each and every man of the mob with the sum of three hundred dollars, in order that he may remain undisturbed at home; and third, they shall, when drafted themselves, pay for their own exemption, get a substitute or go.

Do you not think it may be as well for you to reconsider your action in the premises?

The respectable men of the City pause for a reply.

MAUSERFIELD.

Wrongs of the Colored Race—Letter from Thurlow Weed.

ALBANY, Saturday, July 18, 1863.

MY DEAR SIR: I concur with you in believing that "there are not spires enough in your City to avert the wrath of Heaven" if immediate relief and future protection be not extended to your "Colored Citizens." The page that records their wrongs during the "three days" of misrule in New-York, will be the blackest in its history. That the wretches should have deliberately marked, for rapine and murder, a class at once the least offending and most defenceless is a fact and a feature in crime at which civilization and humanity revolts and shudders!

I thank you for so eloquently and promptly calling public attention to the lamentable condition of these greatly wronged people. That the appeal will be as promptly responded to I do not doubt.

For the persecution of the negro there is divided responsibility. The hostility of Irishmen to Africans is unworthy of men who themselves seek and find, in America, an asylum from oppression. Yet this hostility would not culminate in murder and arson, but for the stimulants supplied by fanatics. Journalists who persistently inflame and exasperate the ignorant and lawless against the negro, are morally responsible for these outrages. But what cares WENDELL PHILLIPS how many negroes are murdered, if their blood furnishes material for agitation?

There is abundant occasion for the public abherrence of mob violence. But when all the circumstances have been reviewed, the popular condemnation of those who, while the nation is struggling for existence, thrust the unoffending negro forward as a target for infuriated mobs, will become general and emphatic. Ultra-Abolitionists were hailed in South Carolina as the "best friends" of secession. Practically, they are the worst enemies of the colored man. But for the "malign influence" of these howling demagogues in Congress and with the President, rebellion would not, in the beginning, have assumed such formidable proportions; nor in its progress would the North have been divided, or the Government crippled.

Presuming that steps will be taken for the relief of the colored people whose dwellings were robbed, and who were driven from their employment, I inclose my check for $500, as a contribution to that object, relying upon you to it give the proper direction. Very truly, yours, THURLOW WEED.

H. J. RAYMOND, Esq.

The National Militia Law.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

If you have any space for further observations on the Conscription act, permit me to offer the following:

The clause of the Constitution reserving to the States the right to officer the militia of the respective States when called into the service of the United States, obviously refers to the regularly organized soldiery of the States existing at the time when they are so called on to serve the General Government; while drafted men may properly be commanded by officers appointed by the General Government under the clause which confers upon it the right to "raise and support armies," and "to make rules for the Government and regulation of the land and naval forces." Sections 8, subdivisions 11 and 13 of art. I.

The objections made to that part of the act which provides for the payment of $300 in the place of personal service, are frivolous.

The act makes no distinctions, because it offers the same privilege to all.

The law takes no notice of the different conditions of men. If it attempted to make distinctions they would necessarily be endless.

For instance, the man who has not a dollar in the world objects that he must go at all hazards; the man who has but $300 objects that he must fight or pay away his all; his neighbor, who has $600, sees injustice in the law forcing him to pay one-half of his whole fortune while he who has $1,200 pays only one-fourth of his fortune and goes free, and so on to the end. Now Government must make some provision which would do justice to all, and I think it has succeeded.

If the act had simply given the right to send a substitute in place of serving oneself, you would have heard no complaints; and yet this $300 provision is not so favorable to the rich as that would be, for the payment of $300 only relieves from one draft, while furnishing a substitute is an entire exemption from all future drafts.

But we must all submit to these misfortunes which are incident to our lot in life—whether that compels us to ride or walk, to live plainly or sumptuously, to be sick or well, to be rich or poor, to fight the battles of our country or stay at home while others fight.

Who ever heard of any complaint against a law which imposes a fine or imprisonment in case of its violation? And yet such a law makes a distinction between those who are able and those unable to pay. The fact that in one case the party is innocent and in the other guilty of a crime is not important; the principle being the same, viz., that the law permits in some cases commutation for a duty as well as for a penalty. CONSCRIPT.

How Catholics Regard the Late Riot.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In discussing the causes and characteristics of the late disturbances in this City, I would respectfully suggest that the following facts should be taken into consideration:

1. Irish Americans, even of the humblest class, bring with them to this country not one particle of prejudice against the colored race. They acquire it here, under the debasing tuition and influence of unprincipled native demagogues.

2. Numbers of the immigrants from Ireland are unable to read, write or think for themselves—thanks to the protracted and infamous class-legislation of Britain. Hence their liability to be deceived and corrupted here by crafty and mischievous political leaders of native birth.

3. No practical Catholic has ever violated law or order in this country. I mean by a practical Catholic, one who attends his church, hearkens to the voice of his pastor and performs his religious duties faithfully and regularly. Such a Catholic would ever cheerfully sacrifice his life in maintenance of all just authority. Those so-called Catholics, who disturb the public peace, are Catholics only in name. They rarely appear in church, and never heed good advice. The Catholic clergy have no influence over such "independent gentry." The only worship with which this reckless class are familiar is that of Bacchus. The truly Catholic citizens in these thriftless, aimless, desperate characters, are in the proportion of 99 to 1. But this one per cent. of the Catholic element is boisterous and turbulent; defies or despises the authority of the Church, and, of course, heeds only the penal legislation of society. It is all that the vast majority of non-Catholics ever hear of, and this only through its vices and crimes. Criminal offenders are not, even in name, exclusively Catholic.

If our public men would bear in mind these facts, the genuine Catholic people would undoubtedly have no cause to complain of criticisms, which are unjust and exasperating to a powerful element of our population, ever unswervingly loyal and ever obedient to authority. Truly yours, MOYLAN.

DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA.

The Evacuation of Suffolk—Temporary Occupation by the Rebels—The Trial of Dr. Wright for the Murder of Lieut. Sanborn, North Carolina.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

NORFOLK, Va., Friday, July 17, 1863.

I am enabled to send you some news concerning the present condition of affairs at Suffolk, Va., since its evacuation by our forces, that you will scarcely receive from any other source, and which you may rely upon as being accurate. Our troops evacuated Suffolk on Friday, the 3d inst., Dodge's mounted cavalry, Lieut.-Col. PATTON commanding, acting as rear guard, the United States gunboat West End descending the Nansemond River at the same time. At the time of our evacuation there was but one regiment of rebels on the Blackwater, and a very few troops between that river and Petersburgh, Va. The place was abandoned by Gen. DIX from purely strategic reasons, as it required a larger number of Union forces to hold it than its importance would warrant. Since the voluntary retirement of our forces the rebels have occupied Suffolk, though not in force. For several days subsequent to our departure there were but few of the rebel army in or about the place. On Thursday week, Col. GARDNER, commanding a Georgia cavalry regiment, entered the town with four companies, taking possession of it and making his headquarters at the place previously occupied by Gen. TERRY. These forces left hastily on Sunday last, assigning no reason for their sudden movement; since which he town has not rejoiced in the presence of a single enlisted grayback." When the Union troops left, the Secesh storekeepers immediately raised the prices on their goods, charging, for example, $48 for one pair of boots. Other goods advanced in proportion, much to the disgust of the rebel customers.

It is stated, upon what I deem excellent authority, that there are no rebels between Suffolk and the Blackwater. Two regiments of their infantry have left this (Blackwater) vicinage for the James River, learning that the Union troops were about to seize a rebel granary near City Point, said to contain fifteen thousand bushels of wheat.

The trial of Dr. DAVID M. WRIGHT for the atrocious murder of Lieut. A. L. SANBORN, will commence on Monday next, at the City Hall, Norfolk, before a Military Commission, of which Major-Gen. ERASMUS D. KEYES will be President. The criminal is to be defended by Hon. L. H. CHANDLER, member of Congress elect from the Norfolk District. Mr. CHANDLER will have something to do to defend this rebel scoundrel and coward successfully. His doom is beyond the reach of human power to modify.

The Legislature of North Carolina is now in session wholly in reference to matters of finance. The Raleigh Register, a notorious rebel print, in referring to the session, says:

"There is mischief brewing which bodes no good to the Confederate cause, and the history of this Legislature does not warrant us in expecting anything but mischief at its hands."

The Register further says that the newspaper organ of the Governor, the Raleigh Standard, is doing everything in its power to incite rebellion against the rebel cause and Government! The members of the Legislature from Caswell County, N. C., have openly announced their determination to advocate the full and unconditional return of the State to the Union, and I see by the Wilmington Journal that other members intend to do the same thing boldly, and with effect.

Resignation of Brig.-Gen. C. C. Dodge—Changes in Command—A Deserter.

NORFOLK, Va., Saturday, July 18, 1863.

I believe I first make public through the TIMES the fact of the resignation of Brig.-Gen. C. C. DODGE, a son of the well known metropolitan banker and citizen, WM. E. DODGE. Gen. DODGE, whose retirement from the army has just been acknowledged by the Government, entered the service as Major of the First battalion of New-York Mounted Rifles, whence he was promoted to be Colonel of his cavalry, and in due time succeeded to a Brigadier-Generalship, which position he held creditably until a month since, when he asked to be relieved permanently from a command. The cause leading to his relinquishing his command is not very generally known, though it is one which in no wise reflects discredit upon him. Quietly returning to New-York, he passed a few days among family and friends, and thence proceeded upon a nuptial tour to Europe.

Major-Gen. DIX has been suddenly ordered to report at New-York, whither he went from Fortress Monroe two days since. Major-Gen. GETTY succeeds to the command of the Department of Virginia, and senior Brig.-Gen. HARLAND to the command of the forces of GETTY'S division in and about Bower's Hill, save Gen. R. S. FOSTER'S brigade, which is at this writing an independent one. A rumor has been prevalent for some days to the effect that Gen. HOOKER was to be assigned to the command of this Department. There is probably some foundation for it, and it is believed that he would make a popular head to this important Department.

The Virginian alleges that its reporter saw a skedaddler at the Provost-Marshal's office a day or two since, who was direct from Richmond, having left there on the 30th ult. This fugitive rebel affirms that when he left the "Confederate capital" there was not to exceed fifteen thousand troops in or about it, and that these included the Home Guard, made up wholly of old men and young men who have not been forced to the field owing to age and physical infirmities. He represents the people of all classes as being in mortal fear of the coming of the Union forces, the opinion being universal that the city could not possibly hold out against an attack. He confirms the list of high prices prevailing at Richmond, and is represented as having taken the oath of allegiance. He then proceeded to New-York.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Monday, July 20.

COURT-MARTIAL.

A Court-martial, of which Brig.-Gen. J. C. CALDWELL, U. S. V., was President, was held at Falmouth, Va., on May 15, and had before it Col. WM. NORTHEDGE, Fifty-ninth New-York Volunteers. The first charge against him was "violation of the seventh Article of War, or attempt to excite mutiny." The first specification read thus:

"In this, that the said Col. WM. NORTHEDGE did, while under arrest, and at a time when the regiment had received orders to get ready to move, immediately appear before Lieut.-Col. MAX A. THOMAN, then in command of said regiment, and, after asking one or two questions, did draw his sword and use threatening language toward said Lieut.-Col. MAX A. THOMAN, then in command, to the effect: 'I will run you through, you son of a ——, if you don't obey my orders,' which conduct excited a mutinous spirit among divers enlisted men."

Of the various other charges founded upon the same offence Col. NORTHEDGE was found guilty, and the proceedings of the Court received this indorsement:

The proceedings of the Court in the case of Col. WILLIAM NORTHEDGE, Fifty-ninth New-York Volunteers, have been disapproved by the proper commanders, the record not showing that the Court or Judge-Advocate were sworn in his presence. But on the recommendation of the Commanding General, and of the Major-General commanding the Army of the Potomac, the President directs that Col. NORTHEDGE be dismissed the service of the United States from the 27th day of June, 1863.

REVENUE DECISION.

It is decided by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that when a tax has been paid by a Bank on the gross amount of its profits, part of which is divided among the stockholders in a half-yearly dividend, the difference is not subject to an additional tax, if it shall afterward be included in a future dividend.

Fatal Boiler Explosion in Lowell.

LOWELL, Mass., Monday, July 20.

A steam-boiler exploded to-day in a brick building on Middle-street, completely demolishing the building, instantly killing three men and injuring seven other persons. The building was occupied by WM. H. GOSSOME as a picker factory, and JOHN S. JACQUES, shuttle manufacturer. The following were killed: Wm. H. Gedding, Geo. C. Abby, G. W. Carter, Ira Bubbie, Miss Odell.

FROM THE SOUTH.

A Fierce Address from Jo. Johnston—Reports from Virginia—The Situation at Mobile.

Mobile papers of July 13, received at Corinth, Miss., contain the following:

FROM JO. JOHNSTON'S ARMY.

JACKSON, Friday, July 10, 1863.

Gen. JOHNSTON this morning issued the following battle order to his troops, which was read along the whole line amid deafening shouts from his soldiers:

HIS BATTLE ORDER.

HEADQUARTERS ON THE FIELD, July 9, 1863.

FELLOW-SOLDIERS: An insolent foe, flushed with hope from his success at Vicksburgh, confronts you, threatening the people, whose homes and liberty you are here to protect, with plunder and conquest. Their guns may even now be heard at intervals as they advance, and this enemy it is at once the mission and duty of you, brave men, to chastise, and expel them from the soil of Mississippi.

The Commanding General confidently relies on you to sustain his pledges, which he makes in advance, and he will be with you in the work even unto the end.

The vice of struggling he bears you to shun and frown upon. If need be, it will be checked by even the most summary remedies.

The telegraph has already announced the glorious victory over the foe won by your noble comrades of the Virginia army on Federal soil. May we not with redoubled hope count on you, while defending your firesides and household goods, to emulate the proud example of your brothers in the East.

The country expects, in this great crisis of its destiny, that every man will do his duty.

THE BATTLE IN PROGRESS.

JACKSON, Miss., Friday, July 10.

The ball has opened. The fight has commenced by skirmishing heavily on Clinton Road with musketry and artillery. The enemy's shells are beginning to fall thick in the northern part of the City. Several persons have been killed and wounded.

Gen. JOHNSTON orders all pillagers to be shot. The Guard will shoot them wherever found.

8½ A. M.—The fight has begun. Our batteries opened on them finely. The enemy are evidently in heavy force. Heavy infantry and artillery skirmishing is going on.

The enemy is shelling the city, and has killed several soldiers and citizens. There has been no general engagement yet.

LATEST FROM JACKSON, MISS.

The very latest news from Jackson is not very certain. It comes from a dispatch to Okalena, and is to the effect that Gen. GRANT'S forces had made an attack, and were repulsed. The news of the fall of Vicksburgh was not received at Jackson until the 7th, although the distance was but forty-five miles, consequently GRANT'S or SHERMAN'S movement against JOHNSTON was in the form of a surprise.

Citizens were flying from Jackson in great consternation, and valuables were being moved away all over the State.

THE SITUATION AT MOBILE.

Major-Gen. D. H. MAURY, commanding at Mobile, issued a proclamation to the citizens of that place on the 8th, warning them that the calamity at Vicksburgh had a peculiar significance for them, that Mobile might be attacked in a short time, and that companies must be immediately formed for protection, and that able-bodied slaves must be sent to work on the defences immediately.

HOW MATTERS APPEAR AT RICHMOND.

From the Richmond Enquirer, July 14.

The facility with which the people and Press of the United States pass from the deepest despondency to the highest point of confidence, has again been exemplified in the recent successes which their armies have met with. The Press of the United States now confidently assert the certain overthrow and utter annihilation of the rebellion within the next six months.

The fall of Vicksburgh, the retreat of LEE, the advance on Charleston, are the events upon which these extravagant anticipations are so confidently based. These are all serious disasters—the most serious that have attended our arms since the beginning of the war. But do they involve any irretrievable calamity? The fall of Vicksburgh opens the Mississippi to the army of GRANT down to Port Hudson. It has been open to his gunboats to that point for many months. It has been open from Port Hudson to its mouth for more than a year. It has been closed to us throughout its length since the fall of New-Orleans. To commerce it is doubly closed—closed by the proximity of our armies to its banks, and closed by the utter want of every article of commerce. It will remain closed to commerce during the war, notwithstanding Port Hudson should fall. No cotton has been grown on its banks since the war began, and what remains on hand has been, or soon will be destroyed? Of what avail, then, will be the opening of the Mississippi in a commercial point of view?

In its military aspect it presents no greater encouragement. To reap the fruits of his success at Vicksburgh, Gen. GRANT must now encounter all those serious difficulties that have overthrown MCCLELLAN, POPE, BURNSIDE and HOOKER, and which have to this time paralyzed Gen. ROSECRANS. Gen. GRANT must now advance. He must either hug the banks of the river, and lose all the practical military fruits of his victory, or he must march his army into the country in search of his enemy, and to further conquest. When he leaves the river and enters the canebrakes, bayous and lagoons of Mississippi or Louisiana, he will encounter difficulties before which he will succumb.

The retreat of BRAGG lengthens ROSECRANS' already long line, and leads him through a wasted and devastated country to an impregnable position on the Tennessee River. This new acquisition of territory involves increased dangers to ROSECRANS' lines of communication, threatened as they are at every moment by incursions from Confederate cavalry.

Serious as the loss of Vicksburgh has been to the Confederate cause, it by no means involves a disaster that in the least compromises our ultimate success. We have not underrated the magnitude of this disaster; but we have presented it to our readers in all its full force and significance.

We hope that much good may ultimately result from the present aspect of affairs. Our people have so long enjoyed continued success, they have been so long accustomed to the shouts of victory, so used to the practical fruits of war, in prisoners, arms, artillery, clothing, wagons and horses, as trophies of Confederate valor and prowess, that all possibility of reverse had departed, and they looked on the contest as one of assured success, which required no further effort at their hands. If the disasters that now cast their gloom over the country, shall have the effect of calling back the people from the pursuit of wealth to the cause of their country, they will be the means of grasping final and complete victory from the jaws of defeat.

ENGINEER CORPS FROM PENNSYLVANIA—THE GOVERNMENT LOAN.

PHILADELPHIA, Monday, July 20.

President KENNEDY, of the Polytechnic College of Pennsylvania, has been authorized by the Secretary of War to organize a corps of engineers to serve for three years or the war. The Polytechnic corps of engineers, composed chiefly of students of the college, is to be recruited to a full regiment. It will be officered by educated, practical engineers, and will report for service within 60 days. This is the first regiment of engineers called for by the Government, and the demand for it at this time foretells an active offensive Fall campaign.

The sales of Five-Twenties to-day amount to $811,000 at the various agencies. Bonds are being delivered to June 13, inclusive. The chief feature of these large sales is that they are distributed in small amounts over a large area.

Military Affairs in Philadelphia.

From the Philadelphia North American, July 20.

Maj.-Gen. GEORGE CADWALADER has been assigned to the command of this department. On Saturday he issued the following order:

HEADQUARTERS, PHILADELPHIA, PENN., July 18, 1863.

By direction of the Major-General commanding the army, the undersigned hereby assumes command of the military forces in this city and vicinity.

Brig.-Gen. WILLIAM D. WHIPPLE, United States Volunteers, is appointed Chief of Staff, and will be obeyed and respected accordingly.

GEORGE CADWALADER, Major-General.

Maj.-Gen. DANA reached this city on Saturday, on his return from Harrisburgh. Gen. CADWALADER outranks him. The force under command of Gen. CADWALADER is not a small one. Before the close of the week it will be increased by the returned Philadelphia militia. At present there is one regiment encamped in the rear of the County Prison, another in Islington-lane, and another in Penn-square. BAKER'S battery, the Navy-yard battery and the Provost Guard have returned to the city. The Dana Troop, Capt. HOWARD, are to be used as a mounted patrol for the city. The Citizens' Bounty Fund Commissioners have appropriated $15,000 for the purchase of horses. The First City Troop and two other cavalry companies now in the city form quite a respectable force. The Grey and Blue Reserves are expected home about the middle of the week.

There are also the Provost-guard, the Hospital Guards, two or three companies of Connecticut cavalry and the police company. Beside this formidable force, all the police of the city, numbering about 600 men, are regularly drilled and accustomed to the use of arms. There are also numerous organized bodies of minute-men, who could be brought into requisition on very short notice. They will be mustered into service, and arms furnished them to-night.

The Fifty-first Massachusetts, three years' regiment, reached the city last evening. It is sent up from the Potomac to do duty in Philadelphia. A six-gun battery also arrived, and moved up to camps.

The Draft in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Monday, July 20.

The draft is progressing quietly to-day in the Third, Fourth and Fifth Districts. It is completed in the Twelfth, Twentieth and Twenty-fifth Wards.

The Draft in Elmira.

ELMIRA, Monday, July 20.

The draft for Elmira came off to-day. Trouble had been anticipated, but the utmost good feeling prevailed during the drafting. At 3 o'clock the conscripts formed a procession, with bands of music, mottoes, costumes, &c.

Loud cheers were given for the Constitution and the laws, speeches were made, and the occasion was one of rejoicing and festivity, rather than disappointment.

The Empire State is loyal outside of New-York, and stands by the Union to the last.

The Turf.

TROTTING MATCH AND RUNNING RACE ON FASHION COURSE.

A trotting match for $1,000, mile heats, best 2 in 3, took place yesterday on the Fashion course, between Mr. DATER'S black stallion, Henry Clay, to 150-pound wagon, and Mr. WALTER'S brown gelding, James Lynch, to sulky. The match created considerable interest in sporting circles, as there was a very large attendance of the leading turfmen present.

The betting was 2½ to 1 in favor of Mr. DATER'S horse, who is considered the best in the country before a heavy weight, and Mr. TALLMAN, who drove him, brought him in first in both heats without a skip. HIRAM WOODRUFF drove James Lynch.

First Heat—Lynch led into the turn by a length and was lapped at the quarter pole by Clay in 39½ seconds, and broke up on the back-stretch, Clay leading by three lengths at the half-mile in 1:15½, just after which Lynch broke up again, Clay winning the heat by three lengths in 2:33¾.

Second Heat—An even start, with Lynch gaining on Clay in the turn, where he broke up, and again at the quarter pole, which Clay passed, two lengths ahead, in 37½ seconds, and the half-mile pole in 1:13½, winning the heat and race easily in 2:33½, four lengths in advance of Lynch who had made a gallant brush up the home-stretch to recover his lost ground.

RECAPITULATION.

Match $1,000, mile heats, best 2 in 3.
D. TALLMAN names bk. s. Henry Clay 1 1
HIRAM WOODRUFF names b. g. James Lynch 2 2

BROOKLYN NEWS.

SENTENCED TO BE HUNG.—In the Court of Oyer and Terminer, yesterday, MICHAEL KENNY, convicted of the murder of JOHN RAVENSBURG, was sentenced to be hung on Friday, the 4th day of September next. After stay of proceedings was granted, on the motion of counsel for prisoner. The case will, therefore, be reviewed by the General Term and passed upon.

DROWNED.—SAMUEL MILLS, a boy aged 14 years, was drowned on Sunday while bathing in a pond, corner of Eighth-avenue and Sackett-street. His body was recovered and taken to his father's residence, corner of Hudson-avenue and Plymouth-street.—On Sunday evening, a little girl, the daughter of PATRICK GRIFFEN, slipped between the bridge of Hamilton ferry and the boat, and falling into the water, was drowned. Inquests were held on both bodies, and verdicts in accordance were rendered.

Williamsburgh.

RETURNED REGIMENTS.—The Forty-seventh regiment, which returned to Brooklyn (E. D.) on Sunday evening, is still under orders for any special service to which, in the anticipated exigencies of the case, they may be assigned. While absent they were for the most part engaged on picket duty near Fairfax Seminary, in Virginia. The Brooklyn (E. D.) companies of the Twenty-eighth regiment returned late on Sunday, and were escorted to their homes in the Sixteenth Ward by a detachment of the Home Guard. One of their company, a man named JACOB WEHR, died of exhaustion on the 18th of July; that was the only casualty which the regiment experienced.

RAISE AT ON THE DRAFT.

We have heard a large number of persons within the last fortnight complaining that they have caught cold—been sitting in a draft. The draft is what is the matter of course; it affects everybody, even the women. Some cough, others complain of pain in the limbs; again, you will find a man who will say he is bilious, and another with his head stuffed up. They all want clearing out—"physically, we mean, of course." Let them take a dose of BRADWAY'S PILLS—those elegant, gum-coated, tasteless Pills. They give you no pain, cure your obstinate SUMMER COLD, invigorate your system, and enliven your intellect. Every General with his battle to fight, every judge with a case to decide, every lawyer with a client to defend, or gold speculator with his pile to make, should take his dose of the Regulating Pills.

Small doses regulate; large doses purge.

DEAFNESS
NOISES IN THE HEAD,
Diseases of the Eye, Ear & Throat,
CATARRH CURED
BY
DR. VON EISENBERG.
Author of "Surgical and Practical Observations on the Diseases of the Ear, with his new Mode of Treatment."

NEW TESTIMONY.

"NEW-YORK, May 6.

I was entirely deaf in my left ear, accompanied by a discharge. I placed myself under Dr. VON EISENBERG'S care, who, by his great skill, restored me to perfect hearing, in the short space of a few minutes, without giving me the slightest pain, and the discharge has ceased entirely. The Eustachian Tube, which was obliterated, is quite open, and I feel that the air-passage performs its functions. I am amply satisfied, and recommend every one suffering from impaired hearing to place themselves under the treatment of this eminent and successful physician.

THOMAS GRANAM, No. 539 6th-av."

"NEW-YORK, May 7, 1863.

I have great pleasure to testify to the skill of Dr. VON EISENBERG. I went into his office almost completely deaf, and came out with my perfect hearing. It is nearly twelve months since, and the hearing is perfect. The operation, which lasted two or three minutes in each ear, gave me no pain whatsoever. I, with confidence, recommend all sufferers to place themselves under Dr VON EISENBERG'S unsurpassing skill.

SAMUEL C. HUNT,
No. 6 Meserole-av., Greenpoint, L. I."

"No. 156 MADISON-ST., NEW-YORK, Feb. 9, 1863.

I have been completely deaf in one ear, and partially so in the other, for above seventeen years, with a disagreeable discharge from both ears, combined with continual rumbling noise in the head, for which I have been treated by a most eminent practitioner in this City without the slightest relief.

I consulted Dr. Von Eisenberg, but I must candidly say that I had no faith in his success when I did so. It is, therefore, due to Dr. Von Eisenberg to acknowledge that I am entirely cured; also, that he displayed that skill and knowledge which have procured for him such an unrivaled reputation. As I have had an opportunity of comparing his mode of treatment with that of others, I can truly state that it is not only superior, but the principles which direct his mode of restoring the hearing are, in my opinion, certain.

JOHN TAYLOR.

NEW-YORK, July 19, 1862.

This certifies that my mother has been for some time afflicted with partial deafness, suffering from pain, and rumbling noises in the head, together with other indications of a total loss of hearing. Dr. VON EISENBERG removed from her ears a great quantity of matter, together with congulated blood, relieving her instantaneously, and all without pain. It is with grateful thanks that I give this testimony to his skill.

CARROLL J. POST, No. 20 South-st.

SIGHT RESTORED.

JUNE 25, 1863.

My daughter brought me to Dr. VON EISENBERG almost completely blind in both eyes. I could not bear the pain nor the light. I am completely cured by Dr. VON EISENBERG, and called now to express my gratitude to the Doctor for his skill and unremitting attention, by which I recovered one of the most precious senses to me after being deprived of it for four years. It is only due to Dr. VON EISENBERG to state that I have tried several physicians in vain; I shall be happy to bear personal testimony to Dr. VON EISENBERG'S unrivaled success to any lady or gentleman who will call on me.

CHRONIC CATARRH CURED.

READ

NEW-YORK, March 20, 1863.

"This is to certify, that I have suffered from very severe CHRONIC CATARRH, with a dull heaviness in the head. I felt my nose completely stopped up accompanied by continual soreness of the throat, the chills stealing over me with occasional hot flushes, a great tightness of the chest and pain, so much so, that every one thought it was consumption. Having heard of the great cures performed by Dr. Von Eisenberg, I consulted him with but little hope of a cure. I am now happy to be enabled to add my testimonial to the great number already in the Doctor's possession, as to his scientific and successful mode of treatment, as he has shown in my case that skill and knowledge which have procured for him so great a reputation. I am so entirely restored to perfect health that I do most sincerely recommend all sufferers from CHRONIC CATARRH and SORE THROAT to apply at once to Dr. Von Eisenberg with a certainty of being cured."

AUCTION SALES.

SCRANTON COAL AT AUCTION.
OFFICE OF THE DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY,
No. 54 Wall-st., New-York, July 13, 1863.
This Company will hold their Sixth Regular Monthly Auction on WEDNESDAY, the 22d day of July, 1863, at 2 o'clock p. m., at the rooms now used as the Merchants' Exchange, Nos. 55 and 57 Exchange-place, corner of William-st., at which time they will offer, by ORDER OF DRAPER, Auctioneer,
TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND TONS OF FRESH-MINED SCRANTON COAL,
embracing all the usual sizes, and deliverable at their depot, Elizabethport, N. J., after the 1st of August next. They will repeat such auction sales on or about the 20th of each month during the year 1863.
The sale will be positive. Each lot put up will be sold to the highest bidder; no bids, in any form whatever, being made for account of, or on behalf of the Company.
Fifty cents per ton, in bankable funds, to be paid at the time and place of sale, and the balance in like funds, on receiving the order for the Coal, which must be called for within ten days thereafter, and the Coal taken away within thirty days from the day of sale, unless navigation is obstructed. Buyers who wish, however, can have an additional thirty days for taking the delivery of their purchases, by making a further deposit of fifty cents per ton, within the ten days above specified. Interest, at 7 per cent. per annum, will in such case be charged on the balance, from the time stipulated for payment until paid; and twenty-five cents per ton to cover the expense of storing the coal—both to be paid on delivery of order.
The other conditions of sale will be substantially those hitherto accepted by all purchasers, by private contract, of coal deliverable at Elizabethport, so far as applicable. The coal will be delivered direct from the cars on their arrival from the mines, when practicable—otherwise from the stock. These conditions will be modified to meet the wants of ocean steamers, whose arrival cannot be definitely fixed.
As interruptions at the mines, and a short supply of labor, have compelled the Company to limit the quantity sold at auction to 25,000 tons monthly, until further notice. If it should be practicable for the Company to return the original monthly quantity it will be done.
JOHN BRISBIN, President.

RAILROAD FOR SALE.
In pursuance of a judgment and decree of the Court of Common Pleas for Franklin County, Ohio, in the case of GEORGE S. COE, Trustee, vs. THE COLUMBUS, PIQUA AND INDIANA RAILROAD COMPANY et al., the undersigned, Special Master Commissioner in said cause, will expose to sale by public vendue, at the Courthouse door, in the City of Columbus, Ohio, between the hours of twelve o'clock M. and four o'clock P. M., of THURSDAY, the 6th day of August, A. D. 1863, the entire Railroad of said Company, including the right of way therefor, held and owned by said Company, and the lands occupied thereby, or needed to be used in the construction or reconstruction, repair, use or enjoyment thereof, by whatever right the same may be holden by said Company, together with the superstructure and tracks thereon; and all bridges, viaducts, culverts, fences, depot-grounds and buildings thereon; including also as a part of said mortgaged premises, all engines, locomotives, cars of every description, rolling stock, turn-tables, water-stations and fixtures, station-houses and lots, and lands used in operating said road, or intended to be used in connection therewith, and owned and held for that purpose; and all tools and implements, materials and supplies, and all shops and engine-houses owned, used or provided by said Company, to be used in operating said railroad, including such of said matters and things as may have been procured, obtained or supplied by the agency of the Receivers in said case; and all the privileges, franchises and powers of said Company, including its franchise to be and act as a corporation, conferred by the charter and amendments to the charter of said Company, authorized by the act of the General Assembly, passed April 11, 1861. All of which will be offered for sale as aforesaid, and sold in one entire parcel and as an entirety—the purchase money to be paid as follows: One-third part thereof within thirty days after the confirmation of the sale by the Court; one-half of the balance in one month thereafter; and the residue in two months thereafter; ten per centum of the purchase money, or $200,000 of the first mortgage bonds, to be deposited with the Commissioner at the time of the bid, before closing a sale, to be forfeited if the bidder fail to fulfill his contract of purchase.
JOHN H. BRADLEY,
Special Master Commissioner.

JOHN MILLER,

MEDICAL.

THE GREATEST DISCOVERY OF THE AGE.
TEETH POSITIVELY EXTRACTED WITHOUT PAIN,

By the use of nitrous oxide gas. Dr. HOYT, Dentist, No. 907 Broadway, near 20th-st., has perfected the application of nitrous oxide to the extraction of teeth. For this purpo e it is superior to chloroform, without the least risk of injury to the patient, all its effects passing away in two minutes after the operation. It causes a quiet sleep, with the most pleasing sensations, during which I extract the teeth without the knowledge of the patient. Feeling that all such discoveries should be used for the public good, I place it before them and will make my charges sufficiently low that all may partake of its blessings. Teeth filled and artificial teeth inserted at my usual prices. Perfect satisfaction guaranteed.

IMPORTANT—FOR THREE DOLLARS.

Dr. C. BERY & CO. will send their specificfor the cure of diseases brought on by secret habits and other improprieties, together with a receipt for its manufacture. Address Dr. C. BERY & CO., New-York.

PRIVATE DISEASES CURED IN THE shortest possible time, by Dr. WARD & CO., No. 80 Lispenard-st., near Broadway, without the use of Mercury, loss of time or change of diet. Dr. WARD, from the hospitals of London, Paris and Edinburgh, is the discoverer of the only certain and reliable remedies for diseases of a private character. In 28 years' practice he has cured more cases of Secret Diseases and Wrong Treatment than all others combined. I can and will cure you in less time and expense than any one can or will, and those who have been robbed of their money and health, call; it will take but little money and time to restore you. If you have been unfortunate, call at once. By his special experience in this much neglected branch of medical science, he is enabled to guarantee a cure in the most complicated cases. Recent cases of Gonorrhœa or Syphilis cured in a few days, without change of diet or hindrance from business. Secondary Syphilis—the last vestige eradicated without the use of Mercury. Involuntary emissions stopped in a short time. Sufferers from Impotency, or loss of sexual power, restored to full vigor in a few weeks. Permanently and speedily cured by a new treatment. Persons at a distance failing to receive prompt treatment elsewhere, may get a permanent cure effected by writing a full diagnosis of their case, addressed to Dr. WARD, No. 80 Lispenard-st., the only place. Call, send or write.

SURE CURE—BY DR. POWERS. SUCCESSfully consulted with Dr. WARD, No. 80 Lispenard-st. Conducted on the plan of the Hospital des Veneriens, Paris, where those afflicted with any form of private disease can receive prompt treatment, without risk or exposure, viz.: Syphilis, gonorrhœa, gleet, strictures, ulcers, tumors, cancers, secondary and constitutional syphilis, diseases of the kidneys, &c., &c. Thirty years of extensive practice, exclusively devoted to the treatment of those complaints enable us to effect cures in cases where others of less experience have failed. Dr. Powers' Essence of Life restores the vigor of youth in three weeks. This marvelous agent restores manhood to the most shattered constitution—physical disqualifications, impediments to marriage, thereby speedily cured. The men to consult, Drs. Ward and Powers, the champions and kings of venereal diseases, possessing the most certain, speedy and only effectual remedies in the world, guarantee a perfect cure, or no charges, in from one to three days. Established in 1840. N. B.—Those who have used their preventives are never without. Send for a circular. To Ladies.—Dr. Powers' Periodical Drops are a safe and certain remedy for monthly irregularities. The above remedies sent by mail. The afflicted should read their circular. Postage free, on receipt of a stamp. Cures warranted.

MANHOOD AND THE VIGOR OF YOUTH regained in three days by Dr. POWERS' ESSENCE OF LIFE. This wonderful agent restores manhood to the most shattered constitution, radically curing Seminal Weakness, Sexual Debility, and impediments to marriage generally; Nervousness, Mental and Physical Incapacity, resulting from self-abuse, &c. The time required to cure the most inveterate case is one week. Failure is impossible. This life-restoring remedy should be taken by all about to marry, as its effects are permanent. Young man, are you subject to that soul and body destroying disease, secret habits? Dr. POWERS' Invigorating Essence is a never-failing cure. Sold by WALTER POWERS, M. D., No. 50 Lispenard-st., between Broadway and Church-st., New-York.

THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY FOR GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

All sufferers from the above complaints, either of recent or long standing, are advised to use Blair's Gout and Rheumatic Pills. These can be relied upon as the most safe and effectual remedy ever offered to the public, and have been universally used in Europe for many years with the greatest success.

Prepared by PROUT & HARSANT, No. 229 Strand, London, England; and sold by their Agents, WELLS & CO., Franklin-st., New-York.

Her Majesty's Commissioners have authorized the name and address of "Thomas Prout, No. 229 Strand, London," to be impressed upon the Government stamp affixed to each box of the genuine medicine.

IMPORTANT TO THE MARRIED AND THOSE ABOUT TO BE MARRIED.—Dr. A. M. MAURICEAU, Professor of Diseases of Women, has just published the 160th edition of the valuable book entitled "THE MARRIED WOMAN'S PRIVATE MEDICAL COMPANION," strictly intended for those whose health or circumstances forbid a too rapid increase of family. Price $1. Sold at his office, No. 129 Liberty-st., New-York; or can be sent by mail, free of postage, to any part of the United States and Canada, by inclosing $1, and addressing Box No. 1,221 New-York City. For sale by H. RICHARDSON, at No. 1 Vesey-st., (Astor House,) and No. 18 Ann-st.; FEDERHEN & CO., 13 Court-st., Boston.

A PHYSIOLOGICAL VIEW OF MARRIAGE—Containing nearly 300 pages, and 150 fine plates and engravings of the anatomy of the sexual organs, in a state of health and disease, with a treatise on self-abuse, its deplorable consequences upon the mind and body, with the author's plan of treatment—the only rational and successful mode of cure, as shown by the report of cases treated. A truthful adviser to the married and those contemplating marriage, who entertain doubts of their physical condition. Sent, free of postage, to any address on receipt of 25 cents, in specie or postage-stamps. Address Dr. LA CROIX, No. 31 Maiden-lane, Albany, N. Y.

DR. POWERS' PERIODICAL DROPS are designed for both married and single ladies, and are the very best thing known for the purpose, as they will bring on the monthly sickness in cases of obstruction from any cause, and after all other remedies of the kind have been tried in vain. Expressly for obstinate cases. Warranted as represented in every respect, or the price will be refunded. ☞Beware of imitations! Purchase directly of Dr POWERS, 50 Lispenard-st., New-York

DR. WARD'S MAGICAL INVIGORATORS, IN the form of Pills, will, in fifteen minutes after being taken, make the recipient as vigorous as if nature had never been retarded or debilitated. To the unmarried or single, in every physical exigency, this unrivaled medicine is earnestly recommended as a complete restorative of the nervous system where manhood has been impaired. Procured of Dr. WARD, No. 80 Lispenard-st., between Broadway and Church-st. Call or send for circulars.

DR. HUNTER'S RED DROP RESTORES the vigor of youth in four days. Restores manhood to the most shattered system. No 3 Division-st., New-York, the only place. Beware of bogus Dr. Hunters. The City is full of knaves, up to every trick to rob him of his great reputation as a skillful and reliable physician. No other office but No. 3 Division-st. Established in 1834. Eight separate rooms and a private entrance.

SOMETHING FOR EVERY LADY.—DR. WARD'S Great Female Benefactor or Golden Regulating Pills. Infallible in correcting, regulating and removing all obstructions, from whatever cause, and they will never disappoint the anxious patient. Office No. 80 Lispenard-st., near Broadway, where Dr. WARD can be consulted, confidentially, day and evening.

DRS. DE FORREST AND BROOKS, NO. 13 Franklin-st., New-York, (near West Broadway,) may be successfully consulted by ladies and gentlemen, in all cases of a delicate nature; twenty years' practice in this branch of the profession; charges low. No lady or gentleman who may be afflicted should hesitate to at once call on them. Several private rooms.

ADVICE TO LADIES.—IN ALL CASES where infallible medicines are desired, or mode of treatment that never fails, call upon Dr. A. M. MAURICEAU, Professor of Diseases of Women, author of "The Married Woman's Private Medical Companion," who treats female complaints exclusively. Office No. 129 Liberty-st.

DR. JOHNSON, NO. 14 DUANE-ST., MAY be consulted with confidence on private diseases. Thirty years in one specialty enables him to guarantee speedy and permanent cures. N. B.—Those who may have been misled by quack advertisements, nostrums, &c., can call on Dr. J. with the certainty of receiving honorable treatment.

PRIVATE CONSULTATION.—DR. HUNTER has directed his attention to diseases of a private character, in which he has treated no less than sixty thousand cases without an instance of failure. His great remedy, HUNTER'S RED DROP, cures certain diseases when regular treatment and all other remedies fail; cures without dieting or restriction in the habits of the patient; cures without the disgusting and sickening effects of all other remedies; cures in new cases in less than six hours; cures without the dreadful consequent effects of mercury, but possesses the peculiarly valuable property of annihilating the rank and poisonous taint that the blood is sure to absorb unless his remedy is used. What is what he claims for it, and what no other will accomplish. Its value in this respect has become so well known, that scientific men in every department of medical knowledge begin to appreciate it, for hardly a week passes that he is not consulted by druggists, chemists and physicians in regard to some pitiful patient who has exhausted the whole field of the faculty, and still the disease will appear. Its popularity is so great that there is not a quack doctor in the City that has not attacked it, and when they find their lies are not so easily swallowed, they then pretend that they can make it. It is $1 a vial, and cannot be obtained genuine anywhere but at the old office, No. 3 Division-st. Book for 15 three-cent stamps. 300 pages, 100 colored illustrations. The best work out.

CONDITION OF THE CITY

QUIET AND ORDER UNIVERSAL.

ARRIVAL OF THE VERMONT BRIGADE.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.

Arrest of a Prominent Ringleader.

FURTHER INCIDENTS OF THE LATE RIOTS.

There were no indications in any portion of the City yesterday of a return of the spirit of lawlessness. The Districts so recently and seriously infected were free from anything like an excitement, and all the indications are that law and order have resumed a sway not again to be interrupted. Those who have participated in the riots have realized the horror of a struggle with the authorities, and seen the utter folly of the conflict. They are bringing good common sense to bear upon the distasteful question of the draft, and while their opposition to it is as decided as ever, and their denunciations bitter, threats of another resort to violence are but seldom heard, and when heard are not from those whose connection with the mob was from sympathy with its prejudices, but because of the opportunity it afforded them for murder and plunder. Apprehensions, however, are entertained by many that on a renewal of the draft the frenzy will be renewed; but the excellent precautions taken, the wise counsels and better feeling prevailing, lead us to believe otherwise, and to anticipate, if any demonstration should unhappily be made, that it can assume no formidable dimensions.

THE VERMONT BRIGADE VOLUNTEERS FOR SERVICE IN NEW-YORK.

The Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth regiments of the Vermont brigade, called the "Green Mountain Brigade" in the Army of the Potomac, arrived in this City yesterday. Their services in the field are historical. They were nine months regiments, and their term of service has fully expired. Upon their arrival being reported to Gen. DIX, he immediately took measures to obtain their services in this City for a few days. Gen. CANBY waited upon Col. HOWE, (who has been appointed upon Gen. DIX's Staff,) and requested him, as State Agent for Vermont, to wait upon the commanding officers of the different regiments to ascertain the feelings of these Green Mountain boys on the subject. Col. HOWE repaired to their temporary encampment on the Battery, where he made a brief and stirring address to the soldiers, who fully appreciated the compliment paid them by Gen. CANBY, and at once volunteered their services in any manner most desirable for the interests of the country and the maintenance of the laws. The regiments are commanded by Col. NEWELL, (Fourteenth,) Col. R. PEARCE, (Fifteenth,) and Col. W. G. VEAZEY, (Sixteenth.) The rank and file are composed of the best citizens of Vermont, and although solicitous of returning to their homes, unanimously express themselves more gratified at the prospect of meeting home traitors than rebels in the field.

The officers visited the rooms of the Union Loyal League last evening, by invitation.

THE ROBBERY OF MESSRS. BROOKS BROTHERS—RECOVERY OF A PORTION OF THE STOLEN GOODS.

PATRICK COLEMAN, an Irish laborer, residing at No. 30 Oak-street, was arrested by Sergeant Lockwood, of the Fourth Precinct Police, charged with having stolen ready-made clothing to a large amount, from the clothing-store of Messrs. BROOKS BROS., corner of Catharine and Cherry streets, during the late riots. The goods consisted of men's coats, pants, vests, drawers, and children's clothing. They were found concealed between the beds in COLEMAN'S apartments. An agent of the Messrs. BROOKS identified the goods as being a portion of those stolen from their establishment.

The accused was brought before Justice DOWLING, and, after an examination, was committed to the Tombs. An important feature in this case is that COLEMAN was heard to say, previous to the riot, that the store of BROOKS BROTHERS was to be forced open and sacked, and that he would be among the first to do it.

We learn from the very best authority that the loss of Messrs. BROOKS BROTHERS, in ready-made clothing, &c., by the raid of the mob, and the thieves who attended there on Tuesday night last, is not less than $50,000, and all the loss and damage may amount to $100,000.

The Police of the Fourth Precinct have succeeded in recovering about $6,000 worth of the stolen goods, and the officers of other Precincts have recovered about as much more.

In many instances, the occupants of tenement-houses, on noticing the approach of the Police, have thrown large quantities of the stolen clothing from upper windows to the sidewalk, so that if a search should follow, the property would not be found in their possession. Much of this clothing has no doubt been sent to receivers and auctioneers residing in other cities, where it will be disposed of for a trifle.

ANOTHER OF THE RINGLEADERS CAPTURED.

Officers MCCORD and ROACH, of the Detective force, yesterday afternoon succeeded in arresting NELSON EDWARDS, a dentist, of No. 726 Broadway, who is charged in the affidavits of five respectable and well-known citizens with having been one of the most zealous and industrious of those who, during the first three days of mob rule, led on the rioters to plunder and arson. The testimony produced before the authorities is very specific and conclusive as to the charge of EDWARDS having made several inflammatory speeches on Monday and Tuesday last, in which he urged the mob to deeds of violence and incendiarism, and wherein he made use of the following language: "Give the d—d Abolitionists the silent knife. Come with me down town and I will show you which are buildings to burn."

The evidence that he went from mob to mob, through all the up-town portions of the City, during the first days of the riots, urging his followers to plunder, burn and slaughter, is overwhelming. He is a man apparently about 35 years of age, and an Englishman by birth, and is represented as of fine appearance and address; possessed of excellent powers of language, cool, shrewd, and of great presence of mind, he was regarded as one of the most dangerous men with whom the authorities and the lovers of law and order had to contend.

The arrest was effected only after the most untiring efforts and vigilant watchfulness on the part of Messrs. MCCORD & ROACH. At a late hour last evening there was at Police Quarters the written testimony of eleven respectable citizens, all tending to show the daring deeds performed by NELSON EDWARDS while leading on the rioters. He is held in close custody and will be tried upon a grave charge.

INTERESTING STATEMENT OF DEPUTY-SHERIFF DUANE.

Mr. JEREMIAH DUANE, one of the Deputy Sheriffs of this county, occupied, with his family, the second story of the building on the corner of Forty-sixth-street and Third-avenue, in the first story of which Provost-Marshal JENKINS received the attack of the mob on Monday last.

We learn from Mr. DUANE, who is on duty at the Tombs, that his wife was questioned very closely on the day before the riot by a resident of that part of the city as to the modes of ingress and egress to and from the house, and that this man replied in answer to her question, that he "intended to throw a keg of powder into the office, and blow the whole affair up."

She remonstrated with him, and told him that her family and a number of other families resided there, which drew from him the advice that she "had better move out, as it would soon be too hot to hold any of them." He told her that the place would certainly be attacked. That it was so attacked and burned to the ground is a fact in history, and the man who foretold it was seen prominent among the crowd hurrahing and shouting like a very fiend.

Mr. DUANE was enabled to save an armful of his wife's clothing, besides which he rescued not a thing from the flames. His family fortunately escaped in the early part of the fray, but he saved his life only after great peril. A German woman living in the same house rushed from her room to the door, with a picture in one hand and her baby in the other, but was stopped by the crowd, who told her that neither creature nor thing should leave the building. Fortunately one of the rascals roughly snatched the picture from her hands, and threw it to his companions. It was passed from hand to hand, and presently one fellow shouted out, "It's SIGEL; she's all right; let her go," and she was graciously permitted with her baby to exist, and to pass unmolested from the sovereign presence.

A CAVALRY SERGEANT KILLED BY THE MOB.

Coroner COLLIN yesterday held an inquest on the body of CHAS. DAVIDS, late a Sergeant of Company G, Thirteenth regiment New-York cavalry, who was shot in the left breast during the riot on Thursday last in Second-avenue, near Twenty-eighth-street. The testimony given upon the Coroner's inquisition shows that he was deliberately shot down by one of the rioters. The remains of the deceased are now at the undertaker's office of Mr. STARRS, No. 237 Bowery, where they can be found by his relatives. Sergeant DAVIDS was about 30 years of age.

ATTEMPT TO KILL THE DRIVER OF A SWEEPING-MACHINE.

At an early hour yesterday morning, JAMES O'NEIL, of the Fourth Ward, whom the Fifth Precinct Police characterize in their returns to headquarters as a notorious desperado, stepped up to Mr. GEORGE HAMPLETON's Union street-sweeping machine, which at the time was standing at the corner of Broadway and Franklin street, and suddenly pointing a pistol at the breast of Mr. HOFF, the driver, told him he would shoot him through the heart unless he at once got down from his seat and promised to have nothing further to do with the sweeping-machine. HOFF declined to obey the summons, when O'NEIL pulled the trigger. Fortunately, the cap failed to explode, and thus Mr. HOFF's life was preserved. At this moment Officers OGDEN and BIXBY, of the Fifth Precinct, arrived on the spot, and took O'NEIL into custody; he was committed to the Tombs by Justice DOWLING. The police authorities have detailed a sufficient force to protect the sweeping-machines from all further attacks.

STILL ANOTHER VICTIM OF THE RIOT.

JOHN GAFFNEY, a young man who resided at No. 232 Division-street, died at the New-York Hospital late on Sunday night. During the Pitt-street riot, on Tuesday last, the deceased was shot through the arm; from the effects of the wound he came to his death. CORONER NAUMAN held an inquest on the body. The testimony showed that he was one of the rioters. He was 25 years of age, born in Ireland, and unmarried.

PROMPT ACTION OF THE CITIZENS IN FEEDING SOLDIERS.

While the riotous proceedings in Second-avenue, near Twenty-eighth-street, were going on, Sergt. WARD, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, received intelligence that the garrison of one hundred soldiers, who were engaged in protecting JACKSON'S foundry, were suffering for food. A call was immediately made upon the citizens of that neighborhood, and very soon several cartloads of provisions were furnished, and also an adequate supply of good coffee. The promptness with which the call was responded to is creditable to the citizens of that vicinity.

A VICTIM OF THE NEW-YORK MOB.

A colored man, whose name is unknown, came to the premises of Mr. LANSING, a farmer living near Cohoes, Thursday night, and represented that he had been set upon by the mob in New-York, and severely injured. He asked permission of Mr. LANSING to sleep in his barn, which was granted. On going into the barn yesterday morning, Mr. LANSING discovered the poor negro lying upon a bundle of straw, dead. On examining the body, it was found that it had been stabbed in various places, and how the man lived long enough to get to Cohoes, was the wonderment of everybody. Coroner BERNHAM held an inquest.—Albany Times.

CITIZENS ORGANIZATION, SEVENTH PRECINCT.

A Committee of the Citizen Police of the Seventh Precinct have issued an earnest appeal to the citizens generally of that Precinct to enroll their names as special Police. The headquarters are at the corner of Jefferson and Cherry streets, and are open every evening at 8 o'clock. The object of the organization is not only for present but for future protection, and to be ready for any emergency, however sudden. It will effectually provide against the defenceless condition in which that Precinct was left when the entire Police force were employed in suppressing the riots, and it would be wise and well for the citizens of all the other Precincts to similarly organize.

ASSAULT BY RIOTERS ON A BRITISH VESSEL.

Among the incidents of the riots which have been unnoticed was the attack of a party of rioters upon a British vessel on Monday, the first day that outrage was inaugurated. About 8 o'clock in the evening a gang, numbering some forty ruffians, armed with clubs, pieces of iron, slung-shot, &c., under the leadership of an apparently respectable man, boarded a small British vessel, from Nassau, N. P., lying at the Pier below Fulton Ferry, and made an attack upon the crew, composed of negroes. Two of them were pursued, beaten, and fled for refuge into the hold, but here was no safety for them, the ruffians supplying themselves with heavy logs from a pile near by, and hurling them down upon their defenceless victims. Another of the crew was caught at the stern of the vessel, knocked down and beaten in a horrible manner, his skull fractured and his arm broken. It is reported that he subsequently died. The two poor fellows in the hold saved their lives but were badly injured. After the cowardly miscreants had beaten to their leader's satisfaction, he waived them off the vessel, and they followed his lead to brutality elsewhere.

LARGE AMOUNT OF STOLEN PROPERTY RECOVERED.

The police of the Nineteenth Precinct visited, in large force, the scene of the late riots, on the east side of the City, yesterday. They searched all suspected houses from Twenty-first to Fortieth-street, between First and Fourth avenues, in quest of property stolen during the late riots. A large amount of goods, amounting to many thousands of dollars, was recovered. A full report of their proceedings will be made in a day or two.

FURTHER CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE RELIEF FUND.

His Honor, Mayor OPDYKE, received yesterday the following additional subscriptions to the fund for the relief of those wounded, and of the families of those killed by the rioters:

New York Lead Co.	$100	Samuel Bonnell, Jr.	$50
Edgar Ketchum	100	Cash	50
Henry W. Smith	100	G. Kemsperger	20
E. H. Foote	25	Elias Howe, Jr.	100
C. E. Detmold	100

THE BROOKLYN COMMON COUNCIL—COMMUNICATION IN REFERENCE TO THE DRAFT—THE MAYOR'S VIEWS UPON THE SUBJECT—AN APPROPRIATION TO RELEASE POOR MEN SUGGESTED.

A meeting of the Common Council was held last evening, the President, Alderman O'KEEFE, in the Chair. After the reading of the minutes, the following communication from Mayor KALBFLEISCH was presented, which, in these times, will attract general attention in this City at least:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, BROOKLYN, July 20, 1863.

To the Honorable the Board of Aldermen:

GENTLEMEN: After conferring with many of our prominent citizens, I have thought proper to call your attention to a subject which seems to demand your earliest and most earnest consideration. While we can rejoice that our city has maintained its quiet and good order, and been permitted to escape any visitation of the terrible scenes of riot and outrage which, during the past week, have afflicted the City of New-York, yet it must be admitted that there are causes still existing among us calculated to excite the liveliest solicitude and apprehension for the future. The numerous notices served upon me by owners of property, that they have reason to fear its destruction by mob violence, is evidence of this fact as conclusive as it is disagreeable. That there is a deep-seated and earnest repugnance felt among our people of all classes, to the conscription ordered by the General Government, must be apparent to all. Among those of limited means, who have not the pecuniary ability to avail themselves of the right of exemption, this feeling of repugnance amounts to a sense of deep personal wrong, to avert which, in their view, justified a resort to forcible resistance to the law. Of course in a Government like ours, of the people, with the ballot-box at their command for the redress of grievances, real or imaginary, there can be no possible excuse or indulgence for mob violence. But it is unnecessary for me to stop here to discuss whether there is or is not any real ground for such a feeling as that to which I have referred. It is sufficient for the present purpose to know that it does exist, and that elsewhere in the State it has been manifested by acts of the most deplorable and objectionable character. On the other hand, that it is the intention of the General Government to enforce the draft at all hazards, its official announcements fully acquaint us. With the knowledge of these facts before us let us, as representatives of the people, intrusted with the conduct of their municipal affairs and the preservation of the public peace and order, consider what is our duty in the premises. In the first place, let it be fully and distinctly understood that we cannot consent even to appear in the remotest degree to concede or yield to the demands or threats of a mob, or of persons inclined to violent demonstrations. But while we should not and cannot hesitate to call into requisition all the means within our control to suppress any riot or resistance to law, is it not also equally our duty, when manifestations of that character are to be apprehended, to exert ourselves to the utmost of our lawful ability to guard against and prevent if possible their occurrence. For myself, I have no doubt or hesitancy upon the subject. I therefore suggest that while we refuse no efforts nor withhold the slightest preparation to maintain the public peace against all attempts to disturb it, that we endeavor, if possible, to remove all pretext for any such disturbance.

It would appear that the features of the Conscription law to which the strongest objection is made, and which more than any other excites the popular dissatisfaction, is the provision which exempts from service any drafted man who shall pay to the Government the sum of three hundred dollars. The operation of this provision, if unassisted upon, is virtually to limit the conscription and the probability of actual service in the army to the poorer classes, the men who do not possess and who would find it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to raise the means required to purchase exemption. This is urged by many to be partial and unjust, and in the instances of those who have families dependent on them for support, and whom, if called into service, they would be obliged to the cold and uncertain care of public or private charity, is felt to be a hardship so intolerable as, in their opinion, to warrant them in forcibly resisting its imposition.

I repeat, again, that I shall not be misunderstood; far be it from me to justify the entertainment of any such unlawful and improper purpose, but that it is entertained to a very considerable and alarming extent, there is not the least doubt; and it is from this source that arises most of the danger that threatens the public peace.

Permit me, then, to suggest to your honorable body the propriety of taking such action as will alleviate and mitigate, if it does not entirely remove this cause of grievance and complaint.

What I would recommend, is the appropriation of an amount of money sufficient to purchase the exemption of those higher families dependent upon them for support, who may be drafted, and who are unable to furnish or procure the means to do it themselves. Long before there was any reason to apprehend any resistance to the draft, the subject had engaged my attention, and reflection had convinced me that the adoption of a measure of the kind I have suggested would really be an exercise of prudent economy on the part of the city. The tax-payer may object to the proposed increase of his already heavy burthen of taxation, but I think that after proper consideration and examination, he will agree with me that it is a measure of true economy. The expenses of supporting the families of the drafted men who have not the means of purchasing exemption, would in the end, I am satisfied, amount to a sum far greater than the $300 paid to retain them at home, themselves to take care of those dependent upon them for support. This is a question of mere dollars and cents, which any can calculate for themselves. And after all, as the Government has announced its intention of appropriating the fund which the purchase of exemptian may create, to the purpose of paying bounties, such an appropriation as I have suggested would but be doing indirectly that which the city has before done directly, providing for the payment of bounties to volunteers and for the relief of their families. And there is the other consideration, which, however we may deprecate it, we are forced to take into account, and that is, should any omission to take some action on our part result in failing to prevent the enactment among us of the scenes that have recently transpired in New-York, we may have a destruction of property, to say nothing of life, to reimburse which would impose upon the tax-payers a burthen compared to which the appropriation suggested would be a mere trifle.

Viewing the proposition in all the phases in which it may be presented—as a measure of pecuniary economy, as a means of preserving the peace and reputation of our City, as setting an example of obedience to law, and as aiding the Government by a liberal contribution to its fund for the encouragement of volunteering—I feel convinced that its adoption would be certain to receive the public sanction and approval.

I leave to your honorable body, if the proposition I have suggested should meet with your favor, the duty of properly considering and determining the amount which shall be appropriated, and of maturing the details through which the proposition shall be carried into effect. Perhaps a reference of the subject to a joint committee, composed of the Board of Contracts and the Finance, or a special committee of your honorable body, with directions to report at an early day to be set apart for the purpose, would be most proper.

Very respectfully,
MARTIN KALBFLEISCH, Mayor.

After the Mayor's communication was read, Alderman TUTHAN stated that he highly approved of the Mayor's suggestions, and hoped it would be adopted in a liberal spirit. He moved its reference to a special Committee of five, which was unanimously carried, and the following gentlemen were appointed on said Committee: Messrs. TUTHAN, Perry, Newman, Nodyne and Seal.

Some routine business was transacted, and the Board adjourned.

THE RETURN OF THE MILITARY.—All the Brooklyn regiments having returned from Maryland they were yesterday mustered at the different armories, at 10 o'clock A. M., and informed that they would be required to report daily until further orders. The object is to keep them in readiness for any disturbance that may take place, although if everything remains as quiet as it is now there will be no occasion for their services. No orders in regard to the draft have yet been received by the Marshals, and it is doubtful whether the draft will be commenced this week.

THE MILITARY.

Department of the East.

Gen. DIX was at his headquarters, No. 44 Bleecker-street, throughout most of yesterday. Maj. CHRISTENSEN, Assistant Adjutant-General to Gen. WOOL, was busily engaged in transferring the office and Departmental papers to the hands of the new commander. Gen. DIX has not yet appointed his Staff officers, but will probably do so in the course of a day or two.

The following order has been issued:

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES TROOPS, CITY AND HARBOR OF NEW-YORK, NEW-YORK July 20, 1863.
GENERAL ORDER, No. 3.—The Commanders of regiments of the New-York State Militia whose period of muster into the service of the United States has expired, will report for instructions to His Excellency the Governor of the State, and in person to the Major-General commanding the division to which they belong. By Order of Brig.-Gen. E. R. S. CANBY.
A. P. FISKE, Assistant Adjutant-General.

THE CAVALRY SERVICE.

It will be seen by the annexed order that Col. T. P. MOTT has been placed in command of the cavalry force in this City. Col. MOTT is an officer of experience, and has thus far given entire satisfaction in the performance of his duties:

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES TROOPS.
CITY AND HARBOR OF NEW-YORK, July 18, 1863.
SPECIAL ORDER No. —.—Col. T. P. MOTT is assigned to the command of the cavalry, and will proceed to give it an efficient organization as speedily as possible.
The Commanders of detachments within the limits of this command will report accordingly.
By order of Brig.-Gen. CANBY.
(Signed)
A. P. FISKE, A. A. General.

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY CORPS, GRAMERCY PARK,
HOTEL, NEW-YORK, July 19, 1863.
GENERAL ORDER No. 5.—In pursuance of the above order, all commanders of cavalry detachments in this command will immediately report at these headquarters their number of men and horses in each of their commands, and place where stationed.
By order of Col. T. P. MOTT,
Commanding Cavalry Corps.
COLLINS CHEBROUGH, First Lieut. and A. A. A. Gen.

THE THIRTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.

The attention of the members of the above regiment is called to the following order:

HEADQUARTERS THIRTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT, N. G. S. N. Y., July 20, 1863.
GENERAL ORDER.—The muster and pay rolls are now being made out. The regiment will be mustered out immediately after they are completed—say at 10 o'clock to-morrow, (Tuesday,) and will be paid at the same time.
A prompt attendance is necessary to secure pay.
The members of the regiment will meet at this armory at 8 o'clock to-morrow, (Tuesday.)
By order, CHARLES ROOME, Colonel.
THEO. W. MORRIS, Adjutant.

MILITARY ORDERS.

The following orders have also been issued:

HEADQUARTERS, TWENTY-SECOND NATIONAL GUARD, S. N. Y., NEW-YORK, July 20, 1863.
GENERAL ORDERS No.—I. C company, Capt. POST, and D company, Capt. THORNELL, will relieve the detachment of this command on duty at the Twentieth Police Precinct to-morrow, July 21, at 4 o'clock P. M. Capt. POST will receive any instructions which may be passed over to him, by Capt ROBERTS, in writing.
E company, Capt. WILSEY, and G company, Capt. HOWLAND, will relieve the guard and A company now on duty at their headquarters to-morrow, the 21st inst., at 10 o'clock A. M.
II. Statements of missing camp equipage and baggage will be handed in at once to the Quartermaster at headquarters, when steps will be taken to recover the same.
III. Muster-out rolls will be prepared forthwith, and one copy of the muster-in rolls will be prepared and certified to by the company commanders. Blanks will be furnished by the Adjutant.
IV. All defective arms will be handed in forthwith to Ordnance Sergeant ADAMS, who will give receipts for same. Sergt. ADAMS will see that these arms are put in suitable condition without delay.
V. All members of the regiment not in the United States service at this time will report themselves to Lieut. GILBERT at headquarters, to-morrow, the 21st inst., at 6 o'clock P. M.
Lieut. GILBERT will have prepared a roll of such members, and return one copy of same to the Adjutant.
By order,
(Signed) LLOYD ASPINWALL,
Colonel Commanding.
WM. J. A. MCGRATH, Adjutant.

THE EIGHTH REGIMENT.

HEADQUARTERS EIGHTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. N. G., July 21.

All officers of this regiment are hereby notified to appear in full fatigue at the State Arsenal, corner of Thirty-fifth-street and Seventh-avenue, at 7 o'clock this morning. By order of
J. M. VARIAN, Colonel.
JOHN MASON, Acting Adjutant.

ARRIVAL OF THE SIXTH REGIMENT.

The Sixth regiment N. Y. S. M., Col. MASON, reached Pier No. 1, North River, yesterday afternoon, and at once disembarked and marched to the Seventh-avenue Arsenal, reporting to Maj.-Gen. SANDFORD.

ARRIVAL OF THE SIXTY-FIFTH (BUFFALO) REGIMENT.

The Sixty-fifth regiment arrived in this City yesterday morning, from the seat of war, and soon after took the steamer Corning for Albany, en route for Buffalo.

THE FORTY-SIXTH MASSACHUSETTS REGIMENT.

The Forty-sixth Massachusetts Regiment arrived in the City about 11 o'clock last night, and immediately reported for duty to Gen. DIX, at his headquarters, No. 44 Bleecker-street.

SEVENTY-FIRST REGIMENT MUSTERED OUT TO-DAY.—The Seventy-first regiment are mustered out to-day. A notice for the meeting of the members for the purpose will be found in the advertising columns.

Steamer Empire, Hunter, Washington, with mdse. and passengers to J. Hand. 20th inst., at 7 A. M., 8 miles S. of Great Egg Harbor, was boarded by the Captain and crew, in a small boat, of the schr. Thomas Winans, Capt. Todd, who reported that on the previous evening, a schr.-rigged steamer with apparently 25 to 30 men on board, stood toward him in a suspicious manner, and supposing her to be a pirate he abandoned his vessel and watched their movements. During the night he saw the supposed pirate signalling another vessel or vessels. In the morning the suspected vessel was lying alongside the Winans, and left her about daylight. Several other vessels that were in company with him had all disappeared, which fact he could not account for. At the time Capt. Todd boarded the Empire he was on his way to his vessel. He did not request the Empire to run out to her, she then lying about 8 miles off shore. The suspected schr. was then only about 5 miles further out. Before the Empire passed out of sight, the Captain and crew had gone on board of their vessel and she was putting to the southwest under full sail. Capt. Hunter, of the Empire, is under the belief that the Captain and crew of the Winans were frightened by a schooner with a fishing party on board, and that what they supposed to be steam was only imagination.

ATTENTION, DISCHARGED OFFICERS OF THE TWO YEARS REGIMENTS.

—Officers who enlisted as privates or non-commissioned officers, and were afterward promoted and then discharged by reason of expiration of term of service, can draw their bounty by calling on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, the 22d, 23d and 24th inst., between the hours of 10 A. M. and 3 P. M., at Room No. 20 American Hotel, corner Chatham-place and Broadway. Letters of inquiry answered free of charge, if addressed to Box No. 922 Washington, D. C.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—HOW THEY TREAT A SOLDIER.—A United States soldier at the Navy-yard. After serving five years in New-Mexico, the advertiser, having returned to New-York, applied at the Navy-yard for work. The Commandant's reply was he had no work for discharged soldiers. The advertiser wishes to make it public, for we all know that where there are over 6,000 workmen, there could be room found for one discharged soldier. It is not a very good way to encourage re-inlistments.

AMERICAN PROTESTANT ASSOCIATION.—The second Annual Festival of the A. P. A., advertised to take place on the 23d inst., is postponed for the present. Due notice will be given of the time to which it is postponed, or soon as the necessary arrangements are completed. THOMAS MINTON, Sec.

TO LET OR FOR SALE—A NEATLY FURNISHED cottage with beautiful large garden, 14 miles from New-York; near railroad station. For particulars, apply immediately at No. 140 Lexington-st., between Gold and Broome sts.
